

COLDER TIMES

Approximately 20,000 years ago, this is what our planet looked like: the sea level was 125 meters lower, the climate was colder and drier but most importantly, huge ice sheets covered continents since the average temperature was 6°C lower than it is today. From ocean currents, to the fauna and flora, including coastlines and seas, everything was radically different.

The sea level at that time was 125 meters lower than today. This is because the ice sheets were so large that they pushed water to the sides of the world's oceans.

The temperature at that time was 6°C lower than it is today. This is because the ice sheets were so large that they reflected a lot of the sun's radiation.

The sea level at that time was 125 meters lower than today. This is because the ice sheets were so large that they pushed water to the sides of the world's oceans.

Labels on the map refer to the ice sheets and the sea level. The sea level was 125 meters lower than today. This is because the ice sheets were so large that they pushed water to the sides of the world's oceans.
