A Typology of Slums of Karachi J. J. van der Linden, 1975

Mediating the Decline of Industrial Cities Christoph Brüll, Sebastian Haumann, Stefan Krebs, Jens van de Maele, 2025-12-19. This volume reflects the latest historiographical discussion about the decline, transformation, heritagisation and re-invention of industrial cities in Europe during the late 20th century. It argues that the notion of mediation as it has been used in the history of technology helps to shed new light on the processes of understanding changes of industrial cities before, during and after the economic crisis of the 1970s and 1980s. The contributors investigate how different actor groups such as scientists, union members, journalists, politicians, artists and historians mediated the understanding of decline, the anticipated future and the heritage of industrial cities. The authors look at a wide range of European cities during different phases of decline and transformation. The book is aimed at scholars of urban history and industrial history as well as contemporary European history, the history of technology and deindustrialisation studies. The contributions also resonate with discussion in neighbouring fields such as urban studies, media studies, cultural studies, sociology and digital history.

The Villain James Perrin, Jim Perrin, 2005. Whillans has an iconic significance for generations of climbers. His epochmaking first ascent of Annapurna's South Face set a standard to which modern Himalayan climbers aspire. Whillans' reputation for toughness led to complete strangers punching him in bars just to see how he'd take it. At age 20, Whillans was 5ft 4in tall, a blue collar guy with the build of a miniature Atlas. Within a year of entering the climbing world in 1950, he had acquired parallel reputations of great skill and daring on the one hand and as a hell-raiser with a savage wit on the other, the Villain of the title who was denied a Knighthood because of a violent brawl with several policemen. His world was miles away from the upper crust environment of the well-heeled climbers who had for so long dominated the sport and this itself led to tensions throughout his life. Whillans exuded an aura of invincibility, forceful, direct and uncompromising. And in the climbing world, his image was that of a superstar with the flawed heroism of a Muhammad Ali. In his own circle, his image was the working class hero on the rock face, laconic and bellicose, ready to go to war with the elements or with any human who crossed his path on a bad day. Unlike many other climbers of his day, Whillans was a regular guy. He wasn't physically impressive and in his later years, he let himself go. Seriously to seed Elizabeth Hawley didn't believe so fat a man could really be a climber He was a very competitive climber and yet he was also willing to risk his life helping others While he was in many ways the archetypal British climber he also did important climbs in Europe the Himalaya South America and Yosemite Whillans wasn't an easy man to get to know but The Villain takes its readers into his world and explores his character as no other book has done
