ABSTRACT

This study assessed the dimensions and determinants of multidimensional women's empowerment in Mali using the Alkire Foster methodology and factor analysis on 1691 consistent responses. Five indicators were employed to create the multidimensional empowerment index, revealing that women are disempowered across all indicators. At a deprivation cut-off of 2/5, 41.8% are multidimensionally disempowered, and 79.6% according to the multidimensional disempowerment headcount. The agency domain significantly contributes to the empowerment index. Factor analysis identified two key factors in the creation of the empowerment index. The age of the respondent, wealth index, sex of the household head, educational status, and region of residence are critical determinants. The study concludes that women's empowerment in Mali is relatively low, requiring more policy efforts. Recommendations include improving educational opportunities, implementing strategies for wealth redistribution and economic inclusion, and promoting gender-balanced household dynamics through awareness campaigns and policy incentives.
