The Garden, 1897    Garden Life, 1918    Town Development Will L. It is a highly readable and authoritative account of the trees in our urban landscapes from the Romans to the present day, including public parks, private gardens, streets, cemeteries, and many other open spaces. It charts how our appreciation of urban trees and woodland has evolved into our modern understanding of the many environmental, economic, and social benefits of our urban forests. A description is also given of the various threats to these trees over the centuries, such as pollution damage during the Industrial Revolution and the recent ravages of Dutch elm disease. Central and local government initiatives are examined together with the contribution of civic and amenity societies. However, this historical account is not just a catalogue of significant events but gives a deeper analysis by exploring fundamental issues such as who owned those treed landscapes, why they were created, and who had access to them. The book concludes with the fascinating story of how trees have contributed to efforts to improve urban conditions through various visions of urban green, such as the model villages, garden cities, garden suburbs, and the new towns. Studies in garden and landscape history have often been preoccupied with those belonging to the rich and powerful. This book focuses particularly on working people and the extent to which they have been able to enjoy urban trees and greenspace. It will appeal to a general readership, especially those with an interest in garden history, heritage, landscapes, and the natural and built environment. Its meticulous referencing will also ensure it is much appreciated by students and academics pursuing further reading and research. It is written by an internationally renowned arboriculturist who combines a passion for trees with a sound understanding of British social and cultural history.

Gardens in Northern Iberia in the Early Middle Ages Wendy Davies, 2024-11-21 Using archaeological, archaeobotanical, and written evidence, this book explores what gardens meant in northern Spain and northern Portugal in the early middle ages, a question asked here for the first time. Dealing with a vast area of the Iberian peninsula that lay beyond Muslim al-Andalus, with great geographical diversity and wide variation in climate, this book spans the sixth to tenth centuries, showing that gardens might lie beside houses or scattered among arable fields or grouped together in garden zones. Gardens are difficult to recognize archaeologically, but excavation suggests that many were terraces, as it also suggests that indicators of intensive use, through fertilization or irrigation or characteristic weed species, may be more useful for identifying garden activity than looking for a distinctive shape. The strongest indications of garden produce are that fruit was always important and so were legumes, and some gardens, especially those owned by monasteries, may have grown herbs. The most striking trend across the tenth century is that peasants sold gardens to monasteries although there are regional differences Catalonia having a more diverse land market Peasants sold in order to get food and monasteries bought partly to provide garden produce including herbs for expanding communities but partly to use and increase garden space for textile plants flax hemp and dye plants for commercial reasons especially urban supply Gardens were vital for the supply of clothes By scrutinising the logistics of small and medium scale ownership the relations of owners with large scale land holders especially institutions and the ins and outs of those economic and social interactions this wide ranging book adds a new dimension to the environmental history of western Europe in addition to contributing to an understanding of the social economic and cultural history of the period more generally
