

MODELLERS AND THEIR MODELS

Helen McHugh's painted figures stand up well in male-dominated model competitions. Graham Dixey reports ...

One of the most things about horses has always been the people who ride them. It's not a horse that you can't ride. It's a person that you can't ride. And that's what makes the world of model horses so special.

The modelers who ride with us often find themselves in the same old, same old place. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing.

They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing.

They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing.

They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing.

They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing. They are the people who are always looking for the next big thing.

Graham Dixey's all-glass horse and rider, painted Helen McHugh's personal favorite, a white Arabian horse, is a fine example of the art of model making. The horse is painted in a realistic manner, and the rider is a fine example of the art of model making. The horse is painted in a realistic manner, and the rider is a fine example of the art of model making.
