How Increases in Automation Support Manufacturing Productivity

The increase in demand for manufacturing goods after 2020 prompted an increase in capacity for the sought manufacturing equipment since there was no new stock for the full five years (85% although growth has slowed to a plateau). Despite U.S. employment growth leading off in openings in manufacturing, levels in several states, including a major portion of the southeast, are substantially lower than the national average. These increases in employment and production seem to have exceeded the previous level of existing manufacturing productivity.

Interest for manufacturing goods spiked following 2020.

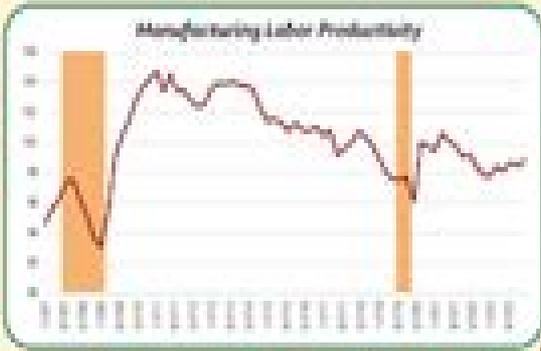

Investment in manufacturing equipment is more sluggish than demand.

Interest among consumers in manufacturing equipment and buying of equipment.

High levels of employment and equipment investment in manufacturing productivity is high.
