

Who is required to file?

Not everyone has to file taxes. If you earn less than the standard deduction amount for your filing status, you don't have to file a tax return. But you might consider filing anyway if you are owed a tax refund.

Fun Fact

If you earn more than $400 by mowing lawns or babysitting (or something similar), the IRS considers you self-employed – no matter how old you are.

Net Income

Your net income is what you take home after you have paid income tax, Social Security, and FICA.

Gross Income

Your gross income is the amount of salary or wages your employer paid you before any tax was taken.

Tax Filing Status

Unless you are married, the filing status on your first tax return should be single. Filing status helps the IRS understand which income tax bracket to put you in.

Income Tax Brackets

The government decides how much tax you owe by dividing your taxable income into chunks – also known as tax brackets. Each bracket gets taxed at a different rate and depends on your filing status.

What you need to file

- Your W-2
- Your legal name and birth date
- Your tax ID number
- A TaxSlayer account

Free Filing with TaxSlayer®

When you file with TaxSlayer, you'll be asked easy questions about your income. You can find the answers on your W-2. The info you provide will be entered into your IRS Form 1040 (your federal tax return). If your state collects income tax, you will fill out a separate state return as well, still using the information found on your W-2.

Ojeda,2003 Authors discuss homelessness teen sex and pregnancy crime drug and alcohol abuse and other factors that put young people at risk and present potential solutions to teens problems Youth Smoking in the U.S. Jonathan Gruber,Jonathan Zinman,2000 The one third rise in the teen smoking rate in the 1990s has led to considerable interest in understanding the determinants of the youth smoking decision We explore four aspects of this decision First we consider the demographic correlates of smoking participation and find that smoking participation is not simply concentrated among the most disadvantaged youth indeed increasingly over time youth smoking is taking place among white suburban youth with college educated parents and good grades Second we show that neither changes in demographic characteristics nor changes in attitudes towards smoking can explain the striking increase in smoking rates in the 1990s Third we document that price is a powerful determinant of smoking for high school seniors using state fixed effects models on data for the 1991 1997 period we estimate an elasticity of smoking participation of 0.67 which suggest that the drop in cigarette prices in the early 1990s can explain 26% of the subsequent upwards smoking trend for seniors But price is not important for younger teens although we do find some evidence that restrictions on access to cigarette purchases can lower the quantity that younger teens smoke Finally we document that there is an important intertemporal correlation in the decision to smoke In particular we find that there is a significant correlation across cohorts in teen smoking and later smoking of adults and that the taxes that teens face on cigarettes have a significant negative effect on their smoking later in life These findings suggest that between 25 and 50% of the rise in youth smoking in the 1990s will persist into adulthood for this cohort rough calculations suggest that the long run cost to the U S will be at least 1 6 million years of life lost from this youth smoking increase
