

How a State Government Works

WHO IS AN MLA?

India has twenty nine states and each state has a Legislative Assembly. (Besides, two union territories, i.e., Puducherry and Delhi, also have assemblies.) Each state is divided into different areas or constituencies. One representative is elected from each constituency and becomes a Member of the Legislative Assembly. Candidates who stand and get elected in an Assembly election are from different political parties.

How is a government formed in a state? Elected MLAs belong to different political parties. If more than half of the elected MLAs belong to a single party, the party is said to be in majority. The leader of the majority party is appointed by the Governor as the Chief Minister of the state. He submits a list of Council of Ministers to the Governor. The ministers are also appointed by the Governor. Except the majority party which forms the government, other parties are called opposition parties.

Let us study the case of Himachal Pradesh in the Assembly election of 2007. Himachal Pradesh (H.P.) had 68 constituencies in the Assembly elections of 2007.

From each of these constituencies many candidates stood for the elections, out of which only one candidate who secured the maximum number of votes won.

Let's view the results of the elections to the Legislative Assembly of Himachal Pradesh in 2007.

Political Party	No. of MLAs elected
Indian National Congress (INC)	23
Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP)	42
Other Political Parties	01
Independents (Who do not belong to any party)	02
Total	68

In order to gain majority in the elections a political party needed to win more than 34 seats. So from the electoral results we find that the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) was the only political party which had won more than 34 seats. It had 42 MLAs elected by the public. Hence, it formed the ruling party. As the Indian National Congress (INC) was the next largest party with 23 MLAs, it was the main opposition party. There were other parties in the opposition including those who had been elected as independent candidates.
