

The videophone computer

Life in the home of tomorrow is going to be very different because your house is going to have a brain. This brain will run your home and look after you, play games with you and generally do anything you want. It will be like having a friendly person around to help with everything that needs to be done, for the brain will speak to you and will be able to understand you. The brain may be best described as a videophone computer. All its thinking is done in a computer, and it communicates with you and others in sound and vision using a videophone, a combination of a telephone and a television set.

The computer runs the home by giving electronic commands to the various robot servants in the house. It never sleeps, and keeps a constant guard on your home by watching for fire and burglars. It takes instant action if anything goes wrong, activating fire prevention systems and alarms. At the same time, it is also busy saving energy by switching off lights and heating when rooms are not used and checking ventilation to keep the air fresh.

An architect discusses his plans for a new building with his clients. He is working from home at his videophone computer. The clients appear on the small screens, together with a view of the site. On the screen below is a plan of the building, and a computer simulator of a building appears on the top screen. Everyone also sees these images on their own computers.

The computer takes up most of your time, but you can talk with it from any room in the house. Throughout your house are terminals linked to the computer, so it can speak to you and show you anything you want to see, wherever you are. You can issue commands or reply to the computer at the terminals, either by using a keyboard or possibly by speaking to it, for it may be able to understand key words and phrases. You may even wear a terminal on your wrist.

The computer is linked to telephone wires or to a radio dish so that it can call up other people and also control computers. In this way, the videophone displays your mail, the news, weather forecasts and any other information you need. And at the same time as you are using it, someone else in the family could be using it to talk with their boss or do business, while others are using it to view television shows, watch video recordings or films or listen to music recordings.
