

Connect the Dots

Making sense of what you've seen, heard, and learned is a crucial part of the service design process. Following these five techniques will help you distill your findings, uncover insights, and decide on the biggest opportunities moving forward.

Each time you understand the customer, you service, and create a new design, you're making connections between what you know and what you don't know. All these connections are important in creating a better service design. Here are five techniques to help you connect the dots.

- 1. Identify the customer
- 2. Identify the problem
- 3. Identify the solution
- 4. Identify the impact
