

Kachru claims that in Indian English, there is a tendency towards complex sentences which results in large scale embeddings (Kachru, 1969). He gives an excerpt from Raja Rao's 'Kanthapura' as an illustration.

in Indian English reduplication is used for emphasis and/or to indicate continuation of a process. Examples are, "He sells different different things; I like hot hot coffee; She has long long hair".

Interrogative Construction

Under this he cites interrogative constructions in which the auxiliary is not fronted, e.g. "What you would like to eat?" "Really, you are finished?" In tag questions there is a tendency to use either a general 'it' or simply a negative particle e.g. "You have borrowed my book, isn't it?" or "She took my book, no?"

Indian English Collocations Certain formations which form part of both grammar and lexis are termed as Indian English collocations.

1) A collocation grammatically deviant:

America-returned, England-returned.

2) Loan-shifts or word-bound translations from other Indian languages: "

three-eyed, salt-giver.

3) A collocation grammatically non-deviant, though deviant contextually:

bangled-widow, cowdung-cakes, eating-leaves, forehead-marking.

4) A collocation not deviant but not productive in the native varieties of English:

sister-sleeper (N + V). In the native varieties of English, there are formations of (V + N) like killjoy, spiffire, etc.

These are formations like twice-born, dining-leaf, waist-thread, etc. Kachru thinks that the most convincing argument for their existence in Indian English is that they make sense in Indian English, they have a meaning with reference to Indian culture.

The vocabulary items that he describes are called hybridized items with several types under it. He defines a hybridized lexical item as one of which is made up of two or more elements, at least one of which is from Indian languages and one from English". The hybrid innovations are categorized under three types:
