Ferreira, 2012 Congress has created multiple trade preference programs designed to foster economic growth reform and development in less developed countries These programs give temporary non reciprocal duty free U S market access to select exports of eligible countries Congress conducts regular oversight of these programs repeatedly revising and extending them This book discusses the major U S trade preference programs their possible economic effects stakeholder interests and legislative options Trade Preferences and Differential Treatment of Developing Countries Bernard M. Hoekman, Çağlar Özden, 2005 The issue of SDT has become very topical again following a period during which it was viewed as an outdated concept for the multilateral trading system We therefore devote attention as well to a number of recent contributions that discuss i whether there is a continued need for SDT and ii how this might be designed from both a development recipient objective and from the perspective of the trading system more generally A major theme of the survey is that most of the issues that are debated today were already being discussed in the 1960s We conclude that those who questioned the value of unilateral preferences have proven to be prescient Trade Preferences for Developing Countries and the WTO Jeanne J. recent debates trade preference erosion has been viewed by some as damaging to developing countries and by others as insignificant except in a few cases But little data have been available to back either view The objective of this paper is to improve our measures of the size utilization and value of all U S nonreciprocal trade preference programs in order to shed light on this debate Highly disaggregated data are used to quantify the margins coverage utilization and value of agricultural and nonagricultural tariff preferences for all beneficiary countries in the U S regional programs and in the Generalized System of Preferences Results show that U S regional tariff preference programs are generally characterized by high coverage of beneficiary countries exports high utilization by beneficiary countries and low tariff preference margins except on apparel For 29 countries the value of U S tariff preferences was 5 percent or more of 2003 dutiable exports to the United States even after incorporating actual utilization Most of this value is attributable to nonagricultural tariff preferences and to apparel preferences in particular These results suggest that preference erosion may be significant for more countries than many had thought World Bank web site
