FLORIOGRAPHY Abigail Trott,2023-07-04 Floriography commonly referred to as the language of flowers is the art of assigning various flowers plants and herbs symbolic meanings This practice dates back to ancient time when messages and emotions were expressed through flowers In the Victorian era floriography gained popularity as a means of communicating emotions that were too private to express verbally particularly for courtship and romantic purposes Each flower has a special meaning and a flower arrangement can convey a variety of meanings based on the type of flowers their colors and how they are arranged It is a complex and nuanced art form since the language of flowers frequently contains hidden messages and subtle symbols Throughout the Victorian era floriography became widely used as a way of communication between lovers and friends During this era certain flowers had specific meanings and were used to represent various emotions For example a red rose was a symbol of romantic love whereas a white rose symbolized purity and innocence Lavender was believed to symbolize devotion and loyalty and daisies were thought to represent childhood innocence and purity These flowers were frequently used in bouquets and other floral arrangements that people gave to their loved ones as a way of expressing affection and admiration While floriography has evolved to include new interpretations and meanings it is still used today in many parts of the world Flowers are still used to send messages in some cultures while they are still utilized for religious or ceremonial purposes in others For example the chrysanthemum is a representation of the imperial family in Japan and is used in ceremonies and as a symbol of honor Flowers and Their Messages Mother,1992 Flowers have a very special place in the life of men and perhaps more so in the life of the devotees of Sri Aurobindo and The Mother In the Ashram the Mother used flowers as a help to the Sadhaks in their Sadhana I give you flowers she once told to a sadhak so that you may develop the Divine qualities they symbolise In this book more than eight hundred flowers have been given by their botanical names along with their spiritual names and significances as revealed by the Mother Almost each page of this book contains select passages from the writings of Sri Aurobindo and the Mother which help the readers to a deeper understanding of the silent messages of this beautiful creation of the nature Though primarily a book of the Mother Sri Aurobindo's touch is invariably felt since the spiritual significances of the flowers correspond to his incisive psychological analysis of the different planes of human consciousness and parts of the being Beautifully produced this unique book is a gracious benediction of the Mother and will be cherished as a treasure by all who love flowers Our Garden Flowers Harriet Louise Keeler,1910
