Variations The Systematic Design Of Supports:

Variations N. J. Habraken, 1974      Variations Sue Gibbons, 1981      Variations N. J. Habraken, J. Th. Boekholt, A. P. Thijssen, P. J. M. Dinjens, 1976-10-15 First published in a Dutch edition in 1974 this book was written in Dutch by four members of the Design Methods Group of the Department of Architecture at the University of Eindhoven after several years of experience in teaching the method they developed and describe in the book Since 1975 N J Habraken has been Head of the Department of Architecture at MIT The other three authors are still teaching at Eindhoven In an Introduction prepared for the English edition Habraken writes that It was hoped that the design of supports would help solve some of the problems traditionally associated with the design of masshousing It is not possible to evaluate the design of a support by examining the dwelling unit plan since there is no such predetermined plan The support building must be judged in a different way There is a PROBLEM OF EVALUATION when the support has to be judged on its potential for accommodating dwelling unit plans which satisfy the individual requirements of different users throughout its life span To solve this problem a systematic way must be found to test the support by generating a series of representative possible floor plans and judging those by a set of general criteria The method presented in this book provides tools to cope with the problem of evaluation The process of evaluation must test what is possible within a given structure e g the possible final floorplans against what is generally desirable e g specifically stated standards The method basically offers a series of operations that give in increasingly complex situations such comparisons Given the width of a bay what meaningful combinations of spaces or functions can be accommodated In certain locations within a structure what kinds of activities are possible Or conversely given certain necessary relationships between functions what bay width offers an optimum solution within certain technical and financial constraints In what specific areas of a structure can certain desirable activities be located The result of each separate operation within the method is always what is called a series of VARIATIONS a number of possible solutions that give us the information we need to make decisions and proceed in the design process In order to make the resultant variations comparable with others that result from other operations they must be generated in a systematic way This means that the way we annotate the variations and the way that the system of annotation is arrived at must be formalized in order to avoid ambiguity The first four chapters are devoted to a step by step description of the method while later chapters show examples of possible applications and provide some explanation of the theoretical background The contents are organized in such a way that the relationship between practical applications and theoretical background is made explicit The book is profusely illustrated with plans and photographs of rooms and buildings It is being distributed by The MIT Press for the MIT Laboratory of Architecture and Planning      Variations Sue Gibbons, 1976      Facility Programming (Routledge Revivals) Wolfgang F. E. Preiser, 2016-05-20 First published in 1978 the objective of this book is to provide an authoritative and selective overview of current user orientated programming methods within the field of environmental design The 19

chapters compiled in this volume describe procedures and the information content of innovative approaches used by leading programming experts in the private and institutional sectors. Emphasis is placed on a qualitative and illustrative focus of selected approaches to environmental programming with the eventual occupants in mind. The chapter groupings are intended to reflect three major areas of professional engagement that serve the field of facility programming. The first group describes the approaches of firms or groups that were organised exclusively to provide environmental analysis and programming services. Part II is composed of chapters by authors who belong to established architectural firms with programming departments and Part III presents evidence that pertains to the supporting role of research and guidance literature from authors primarily affiliated with government agencies or supported by large organisations.

Design for Adaptability in Mass Housing Guopeng Li, 2020-11-05. Before discussing the research itself in greater depth, it is beneficial at this stage to introduce the background to the research. To do so, the chapter is divided into four parts. The first part of the chapter summarises terminologies associated with adaptability and goes on to define and elaborate on the meaning of adaptability in this research study. The second part of this chapter defines mass housing, the development of mass housing and its problems are also illustrated. In the third part, as the key solution for addressing housing occupants' requirements and accommodating changes, the importance of adaptability in improving overall housing quality, particularly from a social, financial and environmental point of view, is outlined. The sustainability of adaptability is also discussed. Even though studies of adaptability have been developed structurally, functionally, technically and financially, adaptability still occupies a marginal position due to the production of mass housing. The final part of the chapter rethinks the notion of adaptability for mass housing. Factors of mass housing related to social, financial, technical and design issues, and which address adaptability, are explored. Lastly, it is revealed that the design aspect of adaptability is chosen as the research focus in this research study.

Architect and urban planner Frans van der Werf discloses in this book his own experiences as one of the pioneers of the worldwide Open Building approach. He designed Molenvliet, the first executed housing project that fully exemplifies the Open Building philosophy and methods. He shares his practice over the course of four decades in four Urban Tissue projects and seven Support Structures in the Netherlands and abroad. They still stand today as exemplars of how this approach can produce affordable, user-centric environments of high quality that balance the common and the individual spheres of interest present in all housing projects. This book is organized around the distinction of the three Levels of Intervention in the built environment: Urban Tissue, Support and Infill. The
