

LIVING SYSTEMS THEORY OF VOCATIONAL BEHAVIOR AND DEVELOPMENT (LSVD)

Fred W. Vondracek, Donald H. Ford, Erik J. Porfeli

A Brief History of the Theory's Development

In 1952 Ford began his search for a sound theory for understanding the dynamics of self-constructing, self-directing, self-regulating and self-controlling processes shaping person development. He discovered the three theoretical cornerstones of modern technology and living systems theory, i.e. General Systems Theory elaborated by Cybernetics and Servomechanisms, and The Mathematics of Information and Communication. Since then most sciences have largely moved from mechanistic models of entities to extensive applications of General Systems Theory (GST) and its information based self-creating dynamics: (e.g., computer and communication systems; biological development; semi-autonomous transportation systems; space travel). There is no longer any doubt about the scientific and practical soundness of General Systems Theory as it has evolved into the 21st century. The exciting focus now is on how to use that theory to understand the processes individuals use to shape their lives.

After 25 years of comprehensive evaluation, integration and application of General Systems Theory and related science based ideas and evidence of developmental processes in humans, Ford published an extensively documented, integrative theory of human development: Humans as Self-Constructing Living Systems: A Developmental Theory of Behavior and Personality (1987). Since then several books applying this theory to understanding aspects of health and human development have been published: Humans as Self-Constructing Living Systems: Putting the Framework to Work (M.E. Ford & D.H. Ford, 1987); Developmental Systems Theory (D.H. Ford & R.M. Lerner, 1992); Motivating Humans: Goals, Emotions, and Personal Agency Beliefs (M.E. Ford, 1992); Systems of Psychotherapy (D.H. Ford & H.B. Urban, 1988); Carol's Alzheimer's Journey (D.H. Ford, 2013); A Living Systems Theory of Vocational Behavior and Development (Vondracek, Ford, & Porfeli, 2014).

During his career as counselor, teacher, scholar, Department Head and Dean in Penn State's College of Health and Human Development, Vondracek focused on a fundamental aspect of a person's life, namely, "vocational behavior and development." That concept is used here because there is extensive evidence that it is broader than "career development." Strong evidence indicates that career development has roots in childhood and adolescent experiences, well before people start thinking about careers (e.g., Hartung, Porfeli, & Vondracek, 2005; Vondracek, 2001a). He also described a meta-theoretical framework known as developmental contextualism: Career Development: A Life-Span Developmental Approach (Vondracek, Lerner, & Schulenberg, 1986) that provided a cornerstone for this new LSVD theory.
