From ocean currents, to the fauna and flora, including coastlines and seas, everything was radically different.

The ice sheets of North and a huge continental ice sheet covered the entire continent of North America and a lot of the land that is now the ocean.

The temperature was not necessarily as cold as we think it is, but the ice sheets were so big that the climate was much colder.

When the ice sheets were so big, the sea level was 125 meters lower than it is today.
