Before, babies would, they sang about the beautiful things she had known when she lived outside the drum in the bright sunshine ... about little antelopes running through the tall grass ... about the gentle blessing of newborn baby kids, and about blue mountains reaching for the sky.

Because she was sure she would never see those things again she sang and sang about happy things, and they were louder than any songs she had ever before sung. All the people held their breath as if not to miss a note.
