Anthony Boundy,2017-06-06 There is a misconception that Southern Cooking consists solely of Creole and Cajun cuisine However both of these culinary styles have their roots planted firmly in Louisiana soil Whereas Southern Cooking encompasses cuisine from all of the Southern states and is as varied and different as the regions that make up the South Creole and Cajun dishes have a strong culinary connection to France a nodding acquaintance to Africa Spain and Native America and to a lesser degree the West Indies Ireland Germany and Italy Southern cooks on the other hand have always creatively dipped into the mixing pot of Native American European and African cuisine learning from cultures that once fused together to make the South what it is today In fact African traditions have had a significant influence on the flavors and cooking methods of what we lovingly refer to as Soul Food As cliché as it may sound heart and soul have been put into many of these dishes There is a deep rooted history behind every recipe A feeling that each one was prepared with love and effort in the hope that every mouthful will be savored and enjoyed by those who eat it Although some dishes are enjoyed throughout the South they ll vary depending on which state you are living Take for instance ribs In Texas they make them spicy and saucy while in Tennessee there s more rub and the sauce is on the side Go to the Carolinas though and the sauce has more of a mustard flavor America is defined by the influence of those who helped to make her great be they African Native American or European and Southern Cooking is at the very center of that beating heart Southern Comfort Recipes for the Soul Ghanesha Adamantia,2024-04-14 Southern cooking is a culinary tradition deeply rooted in the American South characterized by its rich flavors hearty ingredients and diverse influences The cuisine reflects the history culture and geography of the region blending Native American European African and Caribbean culinary traditions Southern Cooking Recipes Virginia A.
