VI. Conclusion And Future Work

In this paper we introduced a new algorithm to generate both positive and negative association rules. Our method adds the conviction to the support-confidence framework to generate stronger positive and negative rules. We compared our algorithm with [14] on a real dataset. We discussed their performances on a transactional database and analyzed experimental results. The results prove that our algorithm can perform better than one in [14].

In future we wish to conduct experiments on some other real datasets and compare the performance of our algorithm with other related algorithms such as reference [7] and reference [16].
