Cheat Sheet

Alliteration

Occurs when the author uses the same letter or sound to begin each word in a string of words, such as, "Abbey's alligator ate apples and asparagus."

Allusion

An allusion is a figure of speech that makes reference to a well-known person, event, or place, such as "I was surprised his nose wasn't growing like Pinocchio's!"

Assonance:

This is the repetition of vowel sounds in nearby words. It is used to reinforce the meaning of words and often used to set the mood. Here's an example of repeated use of the long "o": "Poetry is old, ancient, goes back far. It is among the oldest of living things. So old it is that no man knows how and why the first poems came."

Hyperbole

An exaggerated comment or line used for effect and not meant to be taken literally. An example is, "I've told you a million times!"

Imagery

Language evoking one, some or all of the five senses. An example is, "She ordered a triple scoop of mint, chocolate chip ice cream with hot fudge and whip cream."

Metaphor

A direct comparison between two unlike things without using 'like' or 'as.' An example would be, "You are the light of my life."

Personification

Occurs when the author gives animals, objects, ideas or actions; the qualities of humans. An example is, "The calm sea kissed the southern shore."

Simile

A comparison of two unlikely items using 'like' or 'as.' An example is, "The pine trees stood as tall as statues."

Symbolism

An object or action that mean something more its literal meaning. A symbol's meaning rarely changes from text to text. Rainy days always mean a bad day or hard times.

Tone or Mood

The attitude an author takes toward the shape and life of the words. Tone and mood give voice and personality to the character, as well as as the whole piece, where the reader gets a sense of funny, serious, dramatic, etc.

Bennett,2021-02-04 It will be well for us not to assume an attitude of condescension towards the crowd Because in thematter of looking without seeing we are all about equal We all go to and fro in a state of theobserving faculties which somewhat resembles coma We are all content to look and not see And if and when having comprehended that the r le of observer is not passive but active wedetermine by an effort to rouse ourselves from the coma and really to see the spectacle of the world a spectacle surpassing circuses and even street accidents in sustained dramatic interest we shall discover slowly in the course of time that the act of seeing which seems so easy is not so easy as it seems Let a man resolve I will keep my eyes open on the way to the office of a morning and the probability is that for many mornings he will see naught that is not trivial and that his system of perspective will be absurdly distorted The unusual the unaccustomed will infallibly attract him to the exclusion of what is fundamental and universal Travel makes observers of us all but the things which as travellers we observe generally show how unskilled we are in the new activity A man went to Paris for the first time and observed right off that the carriages of suburban trains had seats on the roof like a tramcar He was so thrilled by the remarkable discovery that he observed almost nothing else This enormous fact occupied the whole foreground of his perspective He returned home and announced that Paris was a place where people rode on the tops of trains A French woman came to London for the first time and no English person would ever guess the phenomenon which vanquished all others in her mind on the opening day She saw a cat walking across a street The vision excited her For in Paris cats do not roam in thoroughfares because there are practically no houses with gardens or areas the flat system is unfavourable to the enlargement of cats I remember once in the days when observation had first presented itself to me as a beautiful pastime getting up very early and making the circuit of inner London before summer dawn in quest of interesting material And the one note I gathered was that the ground in front of the all night coffee stalls was white with egg shells What I needed then was an operation for cataract I also remember taking a man to the opera who had never seen an opera The work was Lohengrin When we came out he said That swan's neck was rather stiff And it was all he did say We went and had a drink He was not mistaken His observation was most just but his perspective was that of those literary critics who give ten lines to pointing out three slips of syntax and three lines to an ungrammatical admission that the novel under survey is not wholly tedious
