

THE UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF Human Rights

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights is a document that sets out the basic rights and freedoms that every person has. It was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948. The declaration is divided into 30 articles, which are organized into three main sections: civil and political rights, economic, social and cultural rights, and the right to self-determination.

The first section, articles 1 through 21, deals with civil and political rights. These include the right to life, liberty and security of person, the right to a fair trial, the right to privacy, the right to freedom of expression, and the right to participate in the government. The second section, articles 22 through 27, deals with economic, social and cultural rights. These include the right to work, the right to a fair wage, the right to social security, the right to education, and the right to a high standard of living. The third section, articles 28 and 29, deals with the right to self-determination and the responsibilities of individuals and states.

The declaration is a cornerstone of international human rights law. It has inspired the development of many other human rights treaties and instruments. It is also a key reference point for human rights activists and scholars. The declaration is a reminder that all people are born free and equal in dignity and rights. It is a call to action for governments and individuals alike to respect and protect the rights of all people.
