

CHURCH WOODCARVINGS

A West Country Study

L. C. D. 1988

The beautiful carved woodwork to be found in so many churches and cathedrals can be easily missed. The sense of discovery when a beautiful or humorous carving is found on the roof of a chancel or on an obscure bench-end is part of the joy of studying the work of medieval craftsmen. Some of the most interesting woodcarvings are tucked away in small village churches.

Here the author explains the subjects treated by medieval carvers, whether religious or mythological, depicting scenes or famous scenes, gives the background to the style used and to the history of church carving.

The West Country is particularly rich in church carvings, and over 200 magnificent photographs have been selected from the author's vast collection to give a clear and exciting introduction to the subject. Techniques of photographing woodwork in churches, and in the case of old woodwork are included, and places in the West Country are listed where good examples of misericords and bench-ends may be seen.

DECORATIVE WROUGHT IRON- WORK IN GREAT BRITAIN

SACRIFICED LETTER

This is a new edition of a studied work by a pioneering architectural metal worker. The book was warmly welcomed when first published, proving of great value to architects, to metal workers and designers and to everyone who cares for craftsmanship. It also has much fascinating information for antiquarians, collectors and antique dealers in the well-illustrated sections of old domestic ironwork.

It opens with an historical introduction, followed by details of technique, equipment, materials, tools and operations. Fine examples of architectural wrought ironwork in Britain, and their designers and makers, are discussed, and there is a full glossary of Blacksmiths' terms, past and present, an extensive bibliography, and an intriguing appendix on old customs among wrought-iron workers.
