FRANCE'S WINE CLASSIFICATION SYSTEM EXPLAINED!

French wines fall under three tiers of generally increasing quality, and geographic specificity.

AOC / AOP

Appellation d'Origine Contrôlée is the top tier of wine classification. It indicates the geographical origin (ex. if it says it is from the Medoc, quality and style of the wine). The rules differ by region, but by style it means if it is a red Burgundy, for example, the wine may only contain Pinot Noir. A blind taster must approve the wine for it to receive AOC classification. Grand Cru and Premier Cru wines fall under this classification.

IGP / Vin de Pays

Indication Géographique Protégée, or the more traditional Vin De Pays, is a classification below AOC that focuses on geographic origin. Unlike AOC, winemakers are allowed to make wines using grape varieties or procedures other than those required by the AOC rules. Your only guarantee in this classification is that the grapes used to make the wine inside were grown in the region the bottle's label says they were.

Vin de France (formerly Vin de Table)

The wine can be made from grapes grown anywhere in France. It is the most basic quality of French wine. No region of origin is mentioned. Naming the grape variety used and the wine's vintage is at the discretion of the winemaker.
