The Ziploc War Ltc Michael Gatewood, 2017-03-22 To a soldier accomplishing the mission is everything The US Army always trains from a position of strength They give you food water ammunition training and your equipment then demand that you perform your duties as a soldier and as a professional But what if the military didn t provide you with the things you needed to fulfill your mission Such is the case of Detachment One a group of medics The first day in country these medics were sent to the Port of Dammam to secure hospital equipment coming in from the US Prior to leaving these medics were told by the 114th Hospital Commander that the group would receive no food water or ammunition They would have to steal everything they needed to survive Once at the port these medics discovered that their own hospital had been sold on the black market in Texas How could anyone be expected to fulfill their mission without the basics of support They would break almost every rule and regulation in the Uniform Code of Military Justice to fulfill their mission With the war over the medics were told that we may not be going home Major Gatewood we need your help We re trying to get home but the Army says it won t happen anytime soon We know there s the Army way and then there s your way The Army has failed us Now it s your turn More rules and regulations to break I told myself This is a true story detailing the exploits of Detachment One through the eyes of their commander Major Mike Gatewood
