

ATLAS OF MILITARY COMPENSATION, 2024

Compensation for military personnel is found in both the defense and nondefense parts of the federal budget. Defense funding, in the Department of Defense's (DoD's) budget, is mostly for current military personnel. Nondefense funding in the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) is mostly for former military personnel.

Since 2000, the total budget for military compensation has been rising steadily, even though the number of military personnel and veterans has been declining. Spending by VA has accounted for most of that increase, rising from a small fraction of the total to about 61 percent of military compensation in the President's 2025 budget request. In the 2025 budget request, total military compensation is $600 billion. (Of that total, $236 billion is for DoD and $365 billion is for VA.) That amount represents an increase of 82 percent since 1980 (and 151 percent since 1999).

Military Compensation: Defense and Nondefense Spending

Most military compensation in DoD's budget is funded through the appropriations for military personnel. That funding accounted for 28 percent of DoD's total budget in 2025, down from 24 percent in 1980 (because of reductions in the size of the force). Some elements of compensation for medical care and family programs are funded through the operation and maintenance (O&M) and family housing accounts.

Budget of the Department of Defense

VA's budget funds income security programs (mostly disability compensation) but also pension and survivors' compensation, medical care (in VA facilities as well as at private-sector facilities), and other benefits and activities (mostly educational benefits but also administrative activities). The budget mostly funds benefits for veterans, but some benefits (such as VA-guaranteed home loans) can be accessed while serving in the military.

After experiencing very little growth from 1980 to 1999, VA's budget has more than quadrupled in real terms since 1999. The budgets for income security and medical care account for most of that growth. In the 2025 budget request, each of those programs is approaching the size of DoD's military personnel budget. VA's funding has grown since 2000, though the number of veterans has been declining. Furthermore, the number of combat veterans has been decreasing as a share of veterans who receive disability compensation—even though the United States was engaged in operations in Iraq and Afghanistan for more than 10 years. Because of pay raises, veterans who served after 9/11 (known as Gulf War II veterans) are more likely to get benefits, whether they served in combat or not.

New Challenges, New Tools for Defense Decisionmaking Stuart E. Johnson, Martin C. Libicki, Gregory F. Treverton, 2003 The collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War and then the terrorist attacks of September 11 2001 transformed the task of American foreign and defense policymaking This book outlines the dimensions of that transformation and sketches new tools for dealing with the policy challenges from modeling and gaming to planning based on capabilities rather than threats to personnel planning and making use of best practices from the private sector A Theory of Military Compensation and Personnel Policy Beth J. Asch, John T. Warner, 1994 The purpose of this study is to develop a unified model that will permit an analysis of all the various issues relating to the military compensation system This report develops a theoretical framework that allows an evaluation of the military pay and retirement system Our analysis aims at addressing the traditional macroeconomic questions and two additional microeconomic questions that have received little attention Does the system motivate personnel to work hard and effectively and Does the system promote the best person job rank matches
