Tree Farming for Rural Welfare: Developmental views P. S. Mani,1994 Farms Trees and Farmers J. E. Michael Arnold,2014-05-22 This title aims to provide introductory and concluding surveys of the subject of farms trees and farmers Two central parts explore trends in farmer tree growing and the factors which influence decision making Eight case studies cover among other topics the need for tree products market access the allocation of land and labour and exposure to risk In showing why farmers decide to grow or not grow trees it seeks to increase the reader s knowledge about farming systems and to provide a guide to encouraging farm forestry throughout the world Bibliography of Agriculture ,1975 Tree Management in Farmer Strategies J. E. M. Arnold,Peter A. Dewees,1995 Although trees play an important economic and social role in many farming systems they have until recently been neglected in both agricultural and forestry research This text sets out major advances in our understanding of tree resources particularly in relation to agricultural intensification

The socioeconomic impacts of large-scale tree plantations on local communities Malkamäki, A.,D'Amato, D.,Hogarth, N.J.,Kanninen, M.,Pirard, R.,Toppinen, A.,Zhou, W.,2017-03-06 Background To meet increasing demand for forest products and services the global area of planted forests has increased dramatically over the past 25 years Further increases in large scale tree plantations are expected due to their high productivity economic profitability and contribution to climate change mitigation targets This raises questions about their long term sustainability as well as their impacts on forest ecosystem services and local livelihoods particularly in countries characterized by rural poverty and insecure property rights Previous studies have revealed mixed impacts but there is a lack of research on the contexts and practices that can contribute to positive and or negative socioeconomic impacts This protocol provides guidelines for a systematic review that synthesizes the current literature on the direct and indirect impacts of large scale plantations on local communities and which will also identify trends bias and gaps in the empirical evidence base Methods The primary research question of the systematic review asks What are the direct and indirect socioeconomic impacts of large scale tree plantations on local human populations We apply a Population Exposure Comparator Outcome Context PECOC framework to structure each stage of the systematic review which comprises a comprehensive literature search screening quality assessment data extraction and analysis We define the exposure of interest to be the establishment or management of a large scale tree plantation by external actors population of interest as households and communities living in close proximity to plantation sites comparators as other communities who have not experienced the same exposure as well as the same communities prior to plantation establishment outcomes as the direct or indirect socioeconomic impacts felt by the population as a result of plantation establishment and context as the social political and environmental factors that may have led to differences in experienced impacts We will search multiple bibliographic databases and organizational websites for relevant studies in both the published and grey literatures These results will be screened by their titles and abstracts followed by their full texts based on predetermined eligibility criteria To ensure that selected studies have controlled for potential biases quality assessment will then take place alongside data extraction Finally the results of quantitative and qualitative analyses will be reported in a narrative synthesis
