Schools are required to provide a range of support when a child's behavior gets in the way of learning. School-wide approaches to behavior apply to all students, and 504 Plans or Individualized Education Programs (IEPs) can provide personalized support and services to students with disabilities. Asking good questions is a strong advocacy skill!

Here are some questions parents can ask in conversations or meetings.

When you see an asterisk (*), please see more information on the next page.

QUESTIONS THAT APPLY TO ALL STUDENTS

How does our school use MTSS* to help all students learn the expectations for behavior?

How do teachers and other staff members deal with bullying*, hurtful, or aggressive behavior?

Who makes decisions about discipline and suspension, and where can I see the policy*?

How and when does our school involve police or School Resource Officers?

QUESTIONS THAT APPLY TO 504 PLANS AND IEPs

How do I set up a meeting to talk about my child's behavior?

Can you give me some specific examples of the behavior you are concerned about, including what was going on before the behavior started and how staff responded?

Has a Functional Behavior Assessment* been completed to learn about the "function" of my child's behavior?

What data can I see about my child's response to the Behavior Intervention Plan* that's in place now?

Who, in the district or the community, can provide training for my child's teachers?

What is the difference between a 504 Plan and an IEP?

What accommodations might help prevent my child's challenging behavior?

What are my child's rights if they are suspended more than 10 school days*?

What are my rights if the school calls me to pick up my child early?
