

Theoretical Foundations of Nursing

The nursing process is an example of an open system.
It interacts with the environment by exchanging information.

The nursing paradigm identifies four linkages of interest to the nursing profession. These four linkages are:

The person, health, environment/situation, and nursing

The nursing paradigm identifies four linkages of interest to the nursing profession. These four linkages are:

The person, health, environment/situation, and nursing

While working on a postoperative unit, the nurse is applying the elements of the Self-Care theory. The nurse who assists the client to manage or attain self-care in wound management is using the theory developed by:

Dorothea Orem

If the nurse wanted to apply a theory that focused on stress reduction, a theory proposed by which one of the following individuals should be selected?

Neuman

The nurse is working within a health care system that uses Neuman's theory. A client is having difficulty breathing and requires oxygen and medication. Within Neuman's theory, the nurse approaches the client to:

Strengthen the line of defenses at the secondary level of prevention

Nursing's paradigm includes

The person, health, environment/situation, and nursing

Validity and predictability of nursing interventions are related to

Prescriptive theories

Prescriptive theories address nursing interventions for a phenomenon and the consequence of a specific nursing intervention.

Prescriptive theories/predict the consequence

Although similarities exist in the different nursing theories, key elements distinguish one from another. The emphasis of Jean Watson's conceptual model is that:

Caring is central to the essence of nursing
