

THEORIZING REMEMBERING

This chapter discusses four main theories of remembering. It starts with a short presentation of the Durkheimian perspective, paying particular attention to Halbwachs' theory of collective memory. This is followed by a discussion of the presentist tradition which assumes that images of the past are strategically invented to suit present needs. The third part describes work on social memory which argues for a more complex view of the relation between the past and the present and between the dominant, or official, memory and popular memory. The final section presents some recent studies that conceptualize memory as actively restructured in a process of negotiations through time.

Halbwachs: the social context of memory

Maurice Halbwachs (1877–1945), as we have already mentioned, is responsible for the introduction of the concept of collective memory into the sociological vocabulary. Despite Halbwachs' highly original argument about the social context of collective memory, his books, Les Cadres Sociaux de la Mémoire ([1941] 1992) La Topographie Légendaire des Évangiles en Terre Sainte (1941) and the posthumously published The Collective Memory ([1926] 1950), were neglected for a long time. Halbwachs, who was also the first to systematically explore the ways in which present concerns determine what of the past we remember, continued the legacy of Durkheim's belief that every society displays and requires a sense of continuity with the past. His affinity with Durkheim's ideas is also clearly visible in his emphasis on the collective nature of social consciousness and his assertion that a collectively imagined past is crucial for the unity of a society, while a shared past is the essential element for the reconstruction of social solidarity. the role sport has as an alternative marker in understanding and mapping memory in Japan by applying the concept of lieux de m moire realms of memory to sport in Japan Japanese history and national construction have not been short of sports landmarks since the end of the nineteenth century Western style sports were introduced into Japan in order to modernize the country and develop a culture of consciousness about bodies resembling that of the Western world Japan s modernization has been a process of embracing Western thought and culture while at the same time attempting to establish what distinguishes Japan from the West In this context sports functioned as sites of contested identities and memories The Olympics baseball and soccer have produced memories in Japan but so too have martial arts which by their very name signify an attempt to create traditions beyond Western sports Because modern sports form bodies of modern citizens and at the same time offer countless opportunities for competition with other nations they provide an excellent ground for testing and contesting national identifications By revealing some of the key realms of memory in the Japanese field of sports this book shows how memories and counter memories of sport moments places and heroes constitute an inventory for identity This book was originally published as a special issue of Sport in Society
