Treasure At Battery Point:

Treasure at Battery Point Helen Corbin, 1998-04 Battery Point's famous island lighthouse just off Crescent City CA becomes the setting for a page turning thriller surrounding an apocalyptic search for sunken gold amid a dangerous love triangle

Battery Park City Charles J. Urstadt, Charles J. Urstadt with Gene Brown, 2005 Battery Park City is a special place and superlatives have come easily to those who have written about it It is one of the most significant new towns ever built in America constructed by private developers on landfill with an infrastructure financed by the sale of bonds by a state created public benefit corporation Its successful mix of attractive office and residential buildings has been the major contributor to the revitalization of New York City's downtown It's also paid off literally The Battery Park City Authority the public benefit corporation that was the driving force behind the entire development is in the black and indeed generates more than 100 million a year in profit without the City or State having a cent invested in the venture The development is even rich culturally It's bookended on its south end by The Museum of Jewish Heritage which has the most important collection memorializing the Holocaust outside of Washington D C's Holocaust Museum and on the north by the new home of Stuyvesant High School which most years sends more graduates to Harvard than any other high school in America Amidst parks sculpture and apartments providing homes for almost 10 000 people most of whom walk to work stands the New York Mercantile Exchange and the imposing World Financial Center Within the shouting distance of young children on scooters and adolescents on skateboards are long town cars waiting to whisk executives to their next appointment But if anything truly merits superlatives it's the public amenities that grace this city extending out into the water from lower Manhattan On a summer Sunday its long and graceful esplanade hosts thousands of bikers hikers and people out for a stroll along the Hudson River The area is thronged at lunchtime And after work on any pleasant afternoon Battery Park City's yacht cove is ringed with workers unwinding after a busy day and its harbor side restaurants are crowded with diners enjoying the spectacular view The city's financial powerhouses charter yachts with names such as Royal Princess and Excalibur anchored in the cove for business promoting cocktail and dinner parties But you don't have to be rich and powerful to enjoy what the development has to offer The indoor concerts under the high arching crystal vault filled with palm trees and bright flowers part of the World Financial Center just behind the cove are free and open to the public Signs on the esplanade caution bikers and skaters to Yield to Pedestrians But one of the marvels of Battery Park City is that the whole development actually does that Here in the heart of Manhattan on the island that the automobile long ago conquered the public spaces have been planned for people on foot The spaces are broad and open the streets just wide enough to provide necessary vehicular access Already although building continues on its several empty lots Battery Park City has become one of New York City's landmarks attracting foreign visitors as well as tourists from around America as one of Gotham's must see sights As with any landmark it now seems to own the space it occupies Despite the evident newness of everything in the development its component parts are beginning to take on an air of inevitability But the truth is that there was nothing inevitable about the development of Battery Park City Every element of it was a battleground over which politicians and planners fought In fact this marvelous and extremely valuable asset to America s greatest city might just as easily have remained under water That s the point of this book There s something deceptively inevitable about land steel and concrete With the passage of time it becomes harder and harder to imagine that the land wasn t there that the

reassessment of Britain's Singapore Naval Base and the WWII Battle of Singapore The Fall of Singapore in February 1942 was arguably the greatest disaster suffered by the British Empire Between 1923 and 1938 the Singapore naval base had been upgraded with some of the largest coast guns ever installed But the guns design and incorrect siting have since been blamed for the humiliating loss during World War II In The Fatal Fortress Bill Clements traces the history of Singapore's armaments from the city's founding in 1819 to the demise of coast artillery in the British Army in 1953 He also follows the development of artillery through the Victorian era of muzzleloading guns to the introduction of breechloading guns in the twentieth century Clements argues that it was not the siting of the guns that brought about the fall of Singapore but an overall failure in command and control and a lack of suitable ammunition This volume is illustrated throughout with photographs drawings and plans and contains a gazetteer describing all the batteries and forts both existing and demolished There is also an annex giving the details of the guns that were installed in Singapore
