this period Yellowstone wolves characteristically lived in packs of 3-16 members some of which followed the ungulates in their seasonal migrations Litters averaging 7-8 were born in late March and April primarily in the north central sector of the park Limited evidence suggests that elk Cervus elaphus were important food for wolves during all seasons Wolves either survived the control era or moved in shortly thereafter for singles pairs and a pack of four were reported the following decade Resident wolf packs however were eliminated from Yellowstone National Park by the 1940s Large canids have been sighted intermittently to the present but their identity has not been established Singles and pairs comprised 89% of 116 probable reports over the past 50 years Speculation about factors limiting the Yellowstone wolf population considers its relative geographic isolation from viable wolf populations and possible genetic problems including wolf coyote hybridization associated with prolonged minimal population status A transplant of wolves from British Columbia or Alberta or perhaps Minnesota is recommended to restore a viable population of this native predator to Yellowstone National Park Wolves for Yellowstone?: Research and analysis Yellowstone National Park (Agency : U.S.), U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, 1990 Vol 3 4 edited by John D Varley and Wayne G Brewster Sarah E Broadbent and Renee Evanoff technical editors The Yellowstone Wolves Gary Ferguson, 1996 Naturalist Gary Ferguson charts wolf reintroduction in the nation's first national park
