Miller presents Ben as an evil figure, embodying the corrupting and nefarious ideology of the American Dream. Not merely an unlikable figure, Ben embodies the real evils of American neo-imperialism in his dealings in diamond mines in the Gold Coast; an exploitative and bloody industry about which he brags of having 'never kept books', suggesting the illegality of his exploits. Equally, Ben treats his family with utter neglect and disdain. When he appears on stage, Miller presents him as constantly on the verge of departure, warning his brother of 'time, William, time' and contributing to Willy's sense of abandonment and insecurity. Furthermore, in Act 1, Ben is presented as tripping up Biff and, with unaccountable aggression, placing the end of an umbrella close to his eye, declaring 'never fight fair with a stranger, boy'. This small vignette is suggestive of his capacity for violence and deception. In referring to his own nephew as a 'stranger,' moreover, he denies any family allegiance to the Lomans. Miller enhances the audience's sense of Ben's evil in the final moments of Act 2, where he appears in Willy's deluded and suicidal thoughts, luring him towards the 'diamonds' in the 'jungle'. Herein, we find Ben embodying the evil of an ideology which champions the pursuit of generational wealth at any price. Miller uses Ben as a microcosm for the destructiveness of the American Dream, according to which self-enrichment becomes the principle social good, and the value of life becomes corrupted and commodified by a materialistic and capitalistic value system.

Contrastingly, I'd argue that Willy's boss Howard, though far from good, is not presented as an evil character. Miller represents Howard as a callous, thoughtless and exploitative employer, however, he is also presented as being highly typical of the post-war American workplace, rather than an abnormal or evil aggressor. His concern for profit over people and complacent tautology 'business is business' reflects a broader social pathology that Miller is attempting to critique. In the beginning of Act 2, Willy rages at Howard, declaring 'I put thirty-four years into this firm, Howard, and now I can't pay my insurance! You can't eat the orange and throw the peel away — a man is not a piece of fruit!' Willy here acts as a mouthpiece for the exploited, downtrodden and discarded
