The Higher Learning In America:

The Higher Learning in America Thorstein Veblen, 1918 The Higher Learning in America: The Annotated Edition Thorstein Veblen, 2015-06

Veblen's insights into the American university system at the outset of the twentieth century are as provocative today as they were when first published. Insisting that institutions of higher learning should be dedicated solely to the disinterested pursuit of knowledge, he urged American universities to abandon commitments to extraneous pursuits such as athletics, community service, and vocational education. He also believed that the corporate model of governance with university boards of trustees dominated by well-to-do businessmen and university presidents who functioned essentially as businessmen in academic dress mandated unsavory techniques of salesmanship and self-promotion that threatened to reduce institutions of higher learning to the status of competitive business enterprises.

In The Higher Learning in America Thorstein Veblen presents a profound critique of American higher education, arguing that it has become increasingly disconnected from its original mission of intellectual pursuit. Written in Veblen's distinctive incisive style, the book employs a blend of sociology and economics to analyze the commodification of education and the rise of the research university, urging readers to contemplate the implications of these transformations on society. As an early 20th-century work, it serves as a pivotal reflection on the values of the time, particularly the intersection of economic forces and educational objectives.

Thorstein Veblen, an influential economist and social critic, crafted this seminal work against the backdrop of the Gilded Age, a period marked by rapid industrialization and the emergence of an elite class. Veblen's own experiences as an academic and his critical stance towards capitalism profoundly shaped his perspective, informing his argument that the higher education system often serves the interests of the economic elite rather than the broader public good, thereby challenging the very foundations of educational purpose. Readers seeking to understand the evolution of American education and its societal implications will find The Higher Learning in America invaluable. Veblen's timeless insights resonate with contemporary issues surrounding educational accessibility, institutional priorities, and the true role of education in a democratic society, making this book essential for scholars, educators, and anyone invested in the future of higher education.

One test of a classic work of social criticism is to see if the critic's central logic and arguments remain generally applicable beyond the critic's own time. One work that has lost little of its polemical power or social relevance is Thorstein Veblen's The Higher Learning in America. First published in 1918, this volume sharply attacked the ascendancy of business values and concerns in America's universities. In Veblen's critical analysis, the institutions of higher learning have taken on the aspects of corporations and trusts, relegating the pursuit of knowledge to secondary status. Today, when the mission of higher education is uncertain and universities compete for endowments and students, this volume is as timely as ever. Veblen was not only America's most famous economist and social critic but a distinguished academic as well, having taught at major universities and the New School for Social Research. His critique is built around an essential distinction between higher learning and career or vocational training. Emphasizing the primacy of learning over training, he repudiates the practice of appointing unqualified businessmen as governing trustees and condemns college administration conceived along corporate guidelines. The entrepreneurial spirit in this instance understands learning as marketable knowledge and measures academic prestige in terms of needlessly elaborate buildings, projects, and material equipment. Veblen's alternative vision severs the pursuit of knowledge and free inquiry from the institutional restrictions of economic interest. Undergraduate colleges and professional schools are to be detached from the university, while self-governance among professors and students replaces boards of trustees and presidents. Veblen's view of learning was tied to a larger conception of civilization, the one which an idly curious elite built and elaborated upon: bodies of knowledge that sustained the practical institutions of society.

Ivar Berg's brilliant and stimulating introduction to this new edition offers a critical reading of Veblen's work in its own context and applies its arguments to controversies currently surrounding the American university. The Higher Learning in America continues to be of interest to educators, intellectual historians, economists, and sociologists.

The Higher Learning in America Robert Maynard Hutchins, Harry S. Ashmore, 1936

Perhaps the pivotal book in the reform of higher education in the United States, Robert M. Hutchins' classic is once again available with a brilliant personal and professional appreciation by Harry S. Ashmore. When it was published in 1936, The Higher Learning in America brought into focus the root causes of the controversies that still beset the nation's educational system. Taking office in 1929 as president of the University of Chicago, Hutchins began his tenure by declaring the learning available in even the most prestigious universities grossly deficient. He cited himself as case in point: At Yale, he had graduated at the top of his college class and set a record in the law school that led to appointment as professor and, at 26, promotion to dean. But he had acquired only some knowledge of the Bible of Shakespeare and Faust of one dialogue of Plato and of the opinions of many semi literate and a few literate judges and that was about all The curricular reforms and administrative reorganization he undertook at Chicago are set forth in this volume along with the philosophical arguments he worked out to explicate and defend his views His goal was to reestablish the liberal arts and humanities as the basis for undergraduate education consigning specialization and research to graduate and professional schools Hutchins envisioned the university as a community of scholars who in addition to teaching and research provided independent thought and criticism of a society being rapidly transformed by science and technology Challenging the educational establishment at every pertinent level he became the most celebrated and most controversial intellectual of his era After twenty two years at Chicago Hutchins became associate director of the newly enriched Ford Foundation where he was primarily responsible for the bold reforms sponsored by its Fund for the Advancement of Education and Fund for Adult Education In 1960 he est Provided by publisher
