Transitions In Work And Learning Implications For Assessment:

Transitions in Work and Learning Board on Testing and Assessment, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, National Research Council, 1997-09-19 The dramatic shift in the American labor market away from manufacturing and the growing gap in earnings between high school and college graduates have contributed to a sense of alarm about the capacity of the nation's schools to supply adequately skilled graduates to the work force The role that schools can or should play in preparing people to enter the world of work is hotly debated In an effort to nurture the important and ongoing national dialogue on these issues the Board on Testing and Assessment asked researchers and policymakers to engage in an interdisciplinary review and discussion of available data and implications for assessment policy Transitions in Work and Learning considers the role of assessment in facilitating improved labor market transitions and life long learning of American workers It addresses the apparent mismatch between skill requirements of high performance workplaces and skills acquired by students in school the validity of existing assessment technologies to determine skills and competencies of persons entering various occupations and ethical and legal issues in the implementation of new testing and certification programs The book also examines the role of assessment in determining needed skills developing ongoing education and training and providing information to employers prospective workers and schools Transition from School to Post-school Life for Individuals with Disabilities Edward M. Levinson, 2004 As such the book may be useful to a variety of professionals including regular education teachers special education teachers vocational education teachers school counselors school psychologists and school administrators as well as professionals employed by community agencies like Vocational Rehabilitation Mental Health Mental Retardation and Social Services BOOK JACKET Content, Pedagogy, Results Amy Elizabeth Ryken, 2001

Assessment in Transition Robert Glaser,Robert Linn,George Bohrnstedt,1997 This is the final report of the National Academy of Education's Panel on the Evaluation of the National Assessment of Education NAEP Progress Trial State Assessment In this report the Panel considers philosophical technical and policy issues concerning the NAEP in the immediate future and in the long term The high technical quality of the NAEP assessment and its independence from unwarranted influences and political pressures have enabled the NAEP to monitor trends in educational achievement reliably since its inception in 1969 In recent years the NAEP has expanded the number of students it assesses and has undergone substantial changes in content design and administration Taken together these changes have produced complexities that threaten the entire program This report suggests ways in which the NAEP should broaden its conceptualization assessment and reporting It asserts that educational achievement must be redefined in terms of what students need to know and be able to do for the 21st century and that education conditions must be created to support this vision of achievement The fundamental purposes of the NAEP should be to inform the public and policy makers about student achievement trends in the nation and the states and to stimulate democratic debate about how to improve education It is important that NAEP standards be set in defensible ways Details are provided for a program of innovation and research that will require substantial planning before the reauthorization of the NAEP in 1998 These chapters are included 1 The Central Purpose of the National Assessment of Educational Progress 2 What Should NAEP Measure 3 Measuring Achievement 4 Informing the Nation 5 Connecting to the Larger Network of Education Information and 6 Planning for the Long Term Contains 7 figures and 43 references SLD
