

At the human end of the tracking line, we must concentrate on things far removed from every day concerns. There are no IRS agents, bosses, or rebellious offspring in the tracking field. A friend says, "There is no such thing as a bad day tracking." Even if the tracking session does not go as well as planned, it presents an interesting puzzle for both of you to solve.

Tracking strengthens your relationship with your dog. Tracking success depends on concentrating on what the dog is communicating with his body language. This opens a new window in the human mind that leads to a deeper understanding of the "dogness" of our canine companions. On one occasion, I was able to use tracking training as a means to rehabilitate a dog that had become threatening to his owner due to a breakdown in the dog-owner relationship. That dog never earned his tracking title, but gradually he did regain his trust in his owner.

WHAT IS SCENT?

Every person (or animal) creates a certain level of scent as he moves about in his environment. Scent is defined in the dictionary as "a substance that affects the sense of smell." Skin cells constantly fall from our bodies and become part of the track scent. In addition, the pressure of footsteps creates a disturbance in the surface on which the footprint falls. On vegetated surfaces, scent is left on crushed vegetation when stepped on and becomes part of track scent. An example of this that humans can sense is the smell of a freshly mowed lawn or hayfield. But a dog can discern scent left by footsteps even on bare dirt or rocky soil. The scenting ability of most dogs is so acute that when checking out a newly encountered track, they can sniff a few yards in each direction and are able to determine which scent is newer and which scent is older. This allows them to discern in which direction a particular track goes.

My favorite way to illustrate scent is to use the following image as an example. Early in the morning, when I look at a dew-dampened lawn, I often see little happy trails criss-crossing it. These trails across the grass made by nighttime critters are briefly visible. Think of these as being scent trails. Both animals and humans create such trails of
