Strategic Assessment In War

Patrick M. Cronin

Strategic Assessment In War:

Strategic Assessment in War Scott Sigmund Gartner, 1999-01-01 How do military organizations assess strategic policy in war In this book Scott Gartner develops a theory to explain how military and government leaders evaluate wartime performance how much they change strategies in response to this evaluation and why they are frequently at odds when discussing the success or failure of strategic performance Blending history decision theory and mathematical modeling Gartner argues that military personnel do reevaluate their strategies and that they measure the performance of a strategy through quantitative dominant indicators But different actors within a government use different indicators of success some will see the strategy as succeeding when others see it as failing because of their different dominant indicators Gartner tests his argument with three case studies the British shift to convoys in World War I following the German imposition of unrestricted submarine warfare the lack of change in British naval policy in the Battle of the Atlantic following the German introduction of Wolf Packs in World War II and the American decision to deescalate in Vietnam after the Tet Offensive He also tests his approach in a nonwar situation analyzing the Carter Administration s decision to launch the hostage rescue attempt In each case his dominant indicator model better predicts the observed behavior than either a standard organization or an action reaction approach World View Steven Metz, Earl H. Tilford, 1994 Every year the analysts at the Strategic Studies Institute prepare current strategic assessments for their particular areas of interest These assessments are the bedrock of the annual SSI Study Program This year s assessments seem especially crucial as the strategic situation throughout the world is far more complex and fraught with danger than many may realize The dramatically altered world of the post cold war period is not the peaceful and tranquil scene many had longed for and thought had indeed arrived From the Danube eastward along the southern boundaries of what used to be the Soviet Union ethnic conflict is rampant Russia remains very much an enigma wrapped in a riddle but as always Russian national interests are paramount in Kremlin thinking While there are those in the Middle East who earnestly seek peace there are others who are determined to support old hatreds and the policies that issued from them In the Far East North Korea has resisted U N demands to inspect its nuclear production facilities China is modernizing its military forces and Japan continues to seek new markets In this dynamic international setting a technological revolution is propelling many nations the United States being foremost among them from the industrial age into the information age The implications for military force structures and strategies are as enormous as they are uncertain

Strategic Assessment 1996: Instruments of U.S. Power ,1996 This volume analyzes how the utility of various instruments of U S power has changed in recent years primarily owing to the end of the Cold War For that reason we need to set forth our view of the changing international context within which the instruments are applied Our perspective on the emerging new world order was set forth in the first chapter of Strategic Assessment 1995 which we summarize here with some changes in nuance to reflect developments during 1995 and with some additional material to extend the analysis beyond the realm of geostrategy. The essential characteristics of the present strategic environment are uncertainty and change. The world is going through several types of dramatic changes. For heuristic purposes those changes can be grouped into three broad categories: geostrategic information and less clearly defined than the others, character of government, and World View. Earl H. Tilford (Jr.), 1997 Assessing War. Leo James Blanken, Hy S. Rothstein, Jason J. Lepore, 2015 Assessing War spans two centuries of US military history to examine the challenge of measuring progress in wartime. Expert contributors examine wartime assessment in both theory and practice and through alternative dimensions of assessment such as justice and proportionality, the war of ideas and economics. Strategic Assessment 1995. Hans Binnendijk, Patrick Clawson, National Defense University. Institute for National Strategic Studies, 1995. World View: The 1996 Strategic Assessment from the Strategic Studies Institute, 1996. Strategic Studies Institute. SSI analysts annually assess the strategic equation for their particular area of interest. These 1996 strategic assessments are crucial for two reasons. First, the post-Cold War world remains complex. These complexities present the nation and the Army with diverse and potentially perilous challenges. To remain the world's best Army in the 21st century, possible strategic challenges must be defined clearly. Second, the Army is addressing this strategic context at a crucial juncture when planned downsizing is nearly completed and the Army's vision of the future is being transformed into modernization requirements through the Force XXI process. Reduction of Army spending continues to be an important issue.
