

VISUAL LITERACY CONNECTIONS TO THINKING, READING AND WRITING

RICHARD SINATRA, Ph.D.

Professor and Chairman
Human Services and Counseling
St. John's University
Jamaica, New York

Providing both rationale and technique for practitioners, this book emphasizes the use of visual literacy to enhance the reading, writing and creative development of learners. The author stresses that visual literacy is primary to human thought and, as such, lays the foundation for more advanced literacies. In the first of three sections, the basic components of visual literacy and how they manifest themselves in activities such as writing, reading, and computer programming are covered. The second part explores the world of the visual system, and how the brain and individual styles of learning operate during verbal and nonverbal learning. In the final section of the book, numerous strategies to help children make visual-verbal connections and to retain, comprehend and compose discourse are included.
