The jaw structure of the cheetah is quite different from that of the tiger. The cheetah's jaw is shorter and wider, and its teeth are smaller. This is because the cheetah is a fast runner and needs to be able to catch its prey quickly. The tiger, on the other hand, is a powerful predator and needs to be able to take down its prey. This is why its jaw is so strong and its teeth are so large.

Another reason for the difference in jaw structure is the way the cheetah and tiger hunt. The cheetah is a sprinter and needs to be able to catch its prey in a short burst of speed. The tiger is a more patient hunter and needs to be able to take down its prey over a longer period of time. This is why the tiger's jaw is so strong and its teeth are so large.
