Davis Bunn, 1992-09-01 In Florian's Gate T Davis Bunn introduced his growing readership to the fascinating world of European art and antiques During months of research he discovered and pursued the legend of The Amber Room an ensemble of precious 18th century wall panels that graced a tsarist palace in St Petersburg Stolen by Nazi invaders it was carried off to a castle in East Prussia Dubbed the eighth wonder of the world the treasure was last seen in 1945 during the chaotic scramble of men and borders during the end of the war Was it destroyed by fire as officials claim or was it mysteriously hidden away Unearthing the mystery has led T Davis Bunn to a maze of tunnels under a former Nazi headquarters in Weimar and to concrete SS bunkers in the hills of Jonastal Reaching back to the ravages of the war the lessons of faith and forgiveness discovered in Florian's Gate continue in this momentous sequel Alexander Kantor and his assistant Jeffrey join a trail of intrigue and cover ups that surround the Amber Room and it pulls them into a web of deception A metaphor for spiritual growth the search for these treasures helps Alexander discover the paradox that greatness in God's eyes is expressed through humility Jeffrey learns to apply the same zeal with which he hunts for artwork to his quest for the knowledge of God Together they find a new understanding of human nature and divine love

The Nelson's and the Amber Room Thomas Flowers, 2018-04-09 There was a golden room that was covered in floor to ceiling amber gold and stones Two different kings called it their own and it graced multiple palaces ultimately becoming the Russian's most prized treasure And then the Nazis invaded and the 180 square foot Amber Room today considered priceless vanished without a trace The Nazis were known for taking art and sculptures that made up the collections of their Jewish victims and the countries they conquered And suddenly an entire room that has often been called the eighth wonder of the world also disappeared It all began over 300 years ago when the King of Prussia Frederick I commissioned a new work of art for his Charlottenberg Palace He called on sculptor Andreas Schlüter to design a room made almost entirely out of amber The orange yellow and red hues of amber were set into gold leaf to make mosaic panels that were finished off with other stones The mosaics took eight years to complete and were finally installed in 1709 The Amber Room didn't stay in Prussia very long In 1716 the second King of Prussia Frederick William I who allegedly prized his military prowess over the artistic endeavors honored by his father gifted the room to Peter the Great of Russia as a symbol of peace between the two countries and a sign of their alliance against Sweden In 1941 the Nazis invaded the Soviet Union As with their other conquests they immediately set their sights on collecting the nation's treasures In particular the Nazis wanted the Amber Room The Soviets didn't give up easily even when it came to their art They tried to protect the Amber Room first by taking it apart and moving it When that failed the amber started crumbling and it was deemed too dangerous to continue they tried to hide it in plain sight by wallpapering over the ornate walls But the Nazis weren't fooled They quickly found what they were looking for disassembled it packed it into 27 crates and shipped it off by train It was moved to a Königsberg Castle in Germany After the castle was bombed by the allies and people started looking for it they found nothing The trail of the lost masterpiece goes dark from there There are several theories about what may have happened to the treasure including a rumor that it was loaded onto a train and stored in a bunker somewhere in Poland or Germany but they are just tales
