ABSTRACT

This Special Issue commemorates the 50th anniversary of communication accommodation theory (CAT) in 2023, formerly known as speech accommodation theory. This article reflects on the diversity of CAT research as seen in recent studies (2021–2023) as well as the empirical papers to follow in this Special Issue. It provides an overview of CAT's history by reference to previously suggested stages in the evolution of research, with many updates to stages therein, demonstrating the theory's cross-disciplinary influences across many applied social contexts, diverse social groups, languages and cultures, and other communicative features. Next, we overview burgeoning recent research in computer-mediated and human-machine interactions that leads to the identification of a seventh stage of CAT and an agenda of research questions for future work suggested by it. In conclusion, we propose a refined and expanded set of Principles of Accommodation.

1. Introduction

Communication accommodation theory (CAT) seeks to explain and predict when, how, and why individuals engage in interactional adjustments with others, as well as recipients' inferences, attributions, and evaluations of, and responses to, them (e.g., Giles et al., 1991; Soliz et al., 2022). Relatedly, in a fictional novel about the antics of a 19th Century detective, Charles Lenox, the author (Finch, 2021: 177) alluded to societal changes that can be understood as illustrations of communication accommodation theory (CAT):

Lenox came from a country whose fashionable manner were largely determine by just a few hundred people. It was said the Prince of Wales could walk along Pall Mall without any risk of being recognized because so many gentlemen had copied his appearance – his clothes, his smart beard, his regal pace and posture. The exactitude was almost scientific. Once, after a bout of rheumatism, the prince had taken to shaking hands with an arm pressed tightly to his side. Within a week it had been the only acceptable way to shake hands in society.

CAT was originally framed as an interpersonal theory of speech nonverbal alignments (see Stamp et al., 2015), but it now includes intergroup processes as well (see Dragojevic and Giles, 2014); for comparison with other concepts and theories of interactive alignment, synchrony, conversational entrainment, and the like, see for example, Gasiorek (2015a):
