

1. Introduction

The purpose of this experiment is to study the characteristics of a PN junction diode under forward and reverse bias conditions.

The diode is a semiconductor device that allows current to flow in one direction (forward bias) and blocks current in the opposite direction (reverse bias).

The forward bias characteristics are studied by measuring the current through the diode as a function of the applied voltage.

The reverse bias characteristics are studied by measuring the current through the diode as a function of the applied voltage. The reverse current is expected to be very small and constant over a wide range of reverse voltages.

2. Theoretical Background

The current-voltage (I-V) characteristic of a diode is given by the Shockley diode equation:

where I is the current, I_s is the saturation current, V is the applied voltage, n is the ideality factor, and V_T is the thermal voltage.
