

Understanding Diabetes

Glucose metabolism

Glucose is the primary source of energy for the body's cells. It is transported from the liver to the cells through the bloodstream. In the cells, glucose is broken down into pyruvate, which is then converted into energy. The liver also stores glucose as glycogen for later use.

Glucagon signals the liver to convert glycogen to glucose and release the glucose into the blood.

Function of insulin

Insulin is a hormone that allows glucose to enter the cells. It is produced by the beta cells of the pancreas. In people with diabetes, the body either does not produce enough insulin or the cells do not respond to it properly.

Action of insulin

In Type I diabetes, the body does not produce enough insulin. This means that glucose cannot enter the cells, leading to high blood sugar levels.

In Type II diabetes, the body produces insulin but the cells do not respond to it properly. This means that glucose cannot enter the cells, leading to high blood sugar levels.

The insulin receptor is open, allowing insulin to enter the cell. This results in normal blood glucose levels.

Glucose Glycogen

Insulin stimulates cells to take up glucose

What is diabetes?

Diabetes is a chronic condition that affects the way the body uses glucose. It is caused by either the body not producing enough insulin or the cells not responding to it properly. This leads to high blood sugar levels.

- Symptoms of diabetes
- Increased thirst, urination
 - Increased hunger
 - Weight loss
 - Blurred vision
 - Slow-healing sores
 - Frequent infections
 - Fatigue

The beta cells in the pancreas convert it into glucose and store it

Health complications

Kidney damage

High blood sugar levels can damage the kidneys over time. This is because the kidneys have to filter out the excess glucose, which puts extra strain on them. This can lead to kidney disease.

Vision problems

High blood sugar levels can damage the blood vessels in the eyes. This can lead to vision problems, such as blurred vision and even blindness.

High blood sugar levels can damage the blood vessels in the heart. This can lead to heart disease, such as coronary artery disease and heart failure.

Nerve damage

High blood sugar levels can damage the nerves in the body. This can lead to nerve damage, which can cause pain, numbness, and weakness.

Treatment and healthy lifestyle changes

There are several ways to manage diabetes and prevent complications. These include:

- Taking medication as prescribed
- Eating a healthy diet
- Exercising regularly
- Monitoring blood sugar levels
- Keeping up with regular check-ups
