Using Intelligence Data For Environmental Needs Balancing National Interests:

Using Intelligence Data for Environmental Needs Scott Pace, Kevin M. O'Connell, Beth E. Lachman, 1997 In the post cold war era there is a growing awareness that intelligence data such as imagery could contribute to environmental programs management of natural resources and even disaster relief A key question facing policymakers and intelligence community managers is whether and how to balance routine unclassified environmental surveillance with traditional intelligence missions This report discusses the stakeholders interests opportunities and risks for the United States in greater use of intelligence data for environmental purposes by civil agencies universities and industry After discussing alternative approaches to providing intelligence data for environmental uses and evaluation criteria the authors offer summary observations open questions and recommendations on actions the U S government and the intelligence community should and should not take An appendix includes three government policy statements on using intelligence data for environmental purposes

Climate Security Intelligence Adrian Wolfberg, 2025-05-24 Climate security intelligence is the capacity to warn national and sub national security organizations of the physical effects of climate change that can have a negative societal effect on nations governments and their populations This book discusses the uniqueness of climate security intelligence the maturity of its development as a knowledge domain and its possible future Written by an intelligence analyst with over forty years of experience this book centers upon the challenges that organizations may face when analysts their managers and their organizations are given the task of warning policymakers and decision makers about threats to climate security Taking a necessarily transdisciplinary approach this book will be of interest to a wide audience of students researchers practitioners and policy makers concerned with how the impacts of climate change affect the social cultural political and economic stability of national interests

Transforming Remote Sensing Data into Information and Applications National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Ocean Studies Board, Space Studies Board, Steering Committee on Space Applications and Commercialization, 2001-12-26 Over the past decade renewed interest in practical applications of Earth observations from space has coincided with and been fueled by significant improvements in the availability of remote sensing data and in their spectral and spatial resolution In addition advances in complementary spatial data technologies such as geographic information systems and the Global Positioning System have permitted more varied uses of the data During the same period the institutions that produce remote sensing data have also become more diversified In the United States satellite remote sensing was until recently dominated largely by federal agencies and their private sector contractors However private firms are increasingly playing a more prominent role even a leadership role in providing satellite remote sensing data through either public private partnerships or the establishment of commercial entities that serve both government and private sector Earth observation needs In addition a large number of private sector value adding firms have been established to work with end users of the data These changes some technological some institutional and some financial have implications for new and continuing uses of remote sensing data To gather data for exploring the importance of these changes and their significance for a variety of issues related to the use of remote sensing data the Space Studies Board initiated a series of three workshops The first Moving Remote Sensing from Research to Applications Case Studies of the Knowledge Transfer Process was held in May 2000 This report draws on data and information obtained in the workshop planning meeting with agency sponsors information presented by workshop speakers and in splinter group discussions and the expertise and viewpoints of the authoring Steering Committee on Space Applications and Commercialization The recommendations are the consensus of the steering committee and not necessarily of the workshop participants
