Teaching Conversation To Children With Autism Scripts And Script Fading:

Teaching Conversation to Children with Autism Lynn E. McClannahan, Patricia J. Krantz, 2005 Scripting is a teaching method designed to help children and adults with autism spectrum disorders ASDs who are nonverbal or who are verbal but don't initiate conversation to initiate conversation. The authors draw on years of experience using scripts in their own clinic and include many case studies that show how scripts have worked. The book defines scripts as an audiotape or written word phrase or sentence that enables young people with autism to use speech to start and continue conversations. At first a child is taught to play the recording of a word for an adult and then get a reaction from the adult e.g. if he plays the script juice the adult will give him a sip of juice or if he plays the script ball the adult will play ball with him. Later on the child is taught to play the script and then say the word himself and get the reward from the adult. As the child becomes better at talking scripts are lengthened to become phrases want juice or play ball and then sentences. And once the child can read scripts are written instead of recorded. As the child masters sets of scripts the adult begins to diminish fade the prompts. If the script was recorded words are gradually deleted from the recording e.g. if the script started out saying Where is mom they will re-record it so it just says Where is and then Where. At this point the child should fill in the blanks.

Teaching Conversation to Child with Autism Lynn E. McClannahan, Patricia J. Krantz, 2005 For parents and professionals this book describes a proven method to help children with autism initiate and sustain conversation through the use of written and audiotaped scripts.

do not initiate to others or engage in interactive game play for sustained periods of time Previous research has demonstrated the effectiveness of script fading procedures in increasing initiations and conversational repertoires for children with autism However these procedures were examined in arranged environments using an activity schedule or in structured settings In addition the role of the conversation partner has not been studied The use of activity schedules has also been effective in increasing independence and decreasing adult prompts In particular the use of a joint activity schedule increased independent game play between preschoolers with autism Therefore the current study investigated a the use of script fading procedures and the use of manual guidance to teach four preschool children to initiate game play during free play without the aide of an activity schedule Second the study examined the effects of scripts and script fading procedures on b the frequency of interactions c the conversation partner s interactions on participants interactions d generalization across stimuli and people e maintenance and f independent free play Results demonstrated participants play initiations engagement number of games played and frequency of interactions increased skills generalized across games and peers and maintained Furthermore the number of prompts decreased indicating script fading procedures with manual guidance alone may be effective in increasing independent free play and initiations

Improving Conversation Skills in a Child with Autism Spectrum Disorder Using Textual Prompts and Front-to-back Fading, 2018 A central characteristic of Autism Spectrum Disorder ASD are deficits in social communication which often results in delays in speech and impairments in communication skills The present study s goal was to improve the quality of conversation skills in a seven year old diagnosed with Autism Spectrum Disorder A multiple baseline across behaviors probe design was used to teach the child appropriate responses in three conversation scripts about topics of interest of the child The scripts were presented to the child using visual text prompts that were faded out using a front to back fading procedure When the child met criteria for reinforcement it was provided in the form of access to the preferred activity that was the topic of the conversation script The interventions for the scripts were presented sequentially with a new script being introduced once the previous one had been mastered The results showed that the textual and the front to back fading procedure are effective for increasing the frequency of responding with appropriate content in a conversation which in turn improves the quality of conversation skills

Script Fading for Children with Autism Alison Marie Wichnick, City University of New York. Psychology, 2013 A critical component of teaching social skills to people with autism is the generalization of behavior change across a variety of untrained situations during which social skills are appropriate The script fading procedure is an effective technology for teaching social skills to people with autism but few researchers have established cues in the natural environment as the discriminative stimuli for social initiations The purpose of this study was to use a script fading procedure to teach young children with autism to initiate to one another across various activities in the school setting and to program for generalization across untrained stimuli in the school setting and in the untrained home setting with a sibling The three participants ages 7 to 10 years demonstrated deficits in social initiations with their peers During the baseline condition the participants did emit initiations to one another although this behavior was variable and did not endure over time With the introduction of the script fading procedure however social initiations increased systematically for all participants Moreover the data demonstrated that the effects of the script fading procedure generalized across untrained stimuli responses and to an untrained setting with an untrained conversation partner Overall this study demonstrated the effectiveness of the script fading procedure in teaching children with autism to initiate to their peers This study has expanded upon previous research by demonstrating generalization from school with peers to the home setting with siblings and by providing social validity data obtained through outside observers that support the effectiveness of the script fading procedure in producing an important behavior change

Effect of Motivation on Teaching Conversational Skills to Children with Autism

Geetika Agarwal,2012 Deficits in conversational skills of children with ASD are persistent and are particularly evident in settings where there are greater opportunities for social and peer interaction MacKay Knott Dunlop 2007 These deficits pose difficulty in these children s learning and developing social relations and interactions with other peers individuals Loveland Landry 1986 The present study examined the role of motivation on the acquisition of conversational skills in three children with the diagnosis of autism All the participants possessed good imitation skills but had difficulties in asking or responding to questions initiating and maintaining conversation Intervention used the procedure of scripts and script fading Scripts were based on the participants preferred and non preferred items The results of the study indicated that the role of motivation was mixed For the majority of the hypothesis the participants did not show an increase in initiation increase in scripted conversation faster learning or better generalization in the high motivation conditions when compared to the low motivation conditions However motivation did seem to play a role in the unscripted conversation and the participants showed an increase in unscripted conversation in the high motivation conditions when compared to the low motivation conditions

Using Social Scripts to Teach Social Interactions to Children with Autism Latasha Shuntel Sturkie,2014 A multiple baseline design across participants was used to assess the effects of social scripts in increasing social interactions between children with autism and typical peers during play activities A script refers to a written or audio taped word phrase or sentence that allows children with autism and other developmental disabilities to initiate and maintain conversation with others A commonly noted limitation in the literature on the use of textual scripts is that they can be difficult to fade completely from use during play activities In the present study investigators attached scripts containing textual prompts to engage in appropriate communication were affixed to play materials during training sessions Then scripts were systematically faded by reducing the font density of the text The purpose of this procedure was to assist with transferring stimulus control from written scripts to activities and to maintain spontaneous social commenting behavior during play Results demonstrated that social scripts were effective increasing unscripted social interactions for two out of three participants Spontaneous social interactions were maintained once scripts were faded

Script Fading as a Procedure for Teaching Unscripted Language to Children with Autism John Lloyd Brown,2003 Using Joint Activity Schedules and Script Fading to Promote Social Interactions Between Children with Autism Katrina Louise Bartell,2013 Joint activity schedules and embedded script fading procedures were used to teach three dyads of children with Autism Spectrum Disorders to engage in social interactions during a sequence of play activities A multiple baseline design across dyads was used to evaluate the effects of joint schedules script fading and prompting procedures graduated guidance on independent performance rates of social interactions and types of contextual verbal behavior Following baseline results showed an increased stable level of on task and on schedule behaviors as a function of the joint activity schedules However joint activity schedules alone did not increase and maintain social interactions for any of the dyads Thus scripts were embedded on play stimuli to promote more opportunities for participants to engage in conversations about the ongoing activities and events occurring in the natural environment Specifically script training procedures increased both taught and untaught verbal interactions across dyads

How to Write and Implement Social Scripts Jennifer B. Ganz,2006 Teaching Children with Autism to Interact Cynthia L. Stevenson,1997 Peer-Implemented Script Fading to Promote Play-Based Statements in Children With Autism Jessie Rosdahl,2016 In this study we examined the effect of peer implemented script fading procedures on the frequency of independent statements of play by children with autism spectrum disorder ASD in a classroom setting The target children included five 5 year old individuals with ASD with the ability to speak in three to five word phrases but did not initiate play with peers We trained typically developing peers ages 5 to 6 on how to implement procedures prompt correct responses systematically fade scripts and interact with the target children We used a script fading intervention including auditory scripts that prompted initiation of play with peers We conducted sessions in an open area of a classroom using a preferred toy set and two additional toy sets for generalization Following training we found that peers implemented procedures with fidelity and target participants showed an increase in independent statements of play both scripted and unscripted

Using Script Fading to Increase Play-based Language Between Children with Autism and Their Typically Developing Siblings Jessica Suzanne Akers,2011 Teaching Children with Autism to Initiate Social Interaction with Their Parents and Siblings Using Script-fading Procedure Lydia Li,2009 Teach Me With Pictures Linda Hodgdon,Ruth Harris,Simone Griffin,2013-07-28 An easy to use resource for professionals and parents this book is full of fun and practical ideas to help motivate and extend communication and play skills in children with autism with the support of pictures It contains 40 visual scripts across a range of different activities such as drawing cooking imaginative play and life skills
