As an American student abroad, I will represent the diversity and openness at the heart of American culture. I plan to share my own background and learn from locals through activities like hosting a potluck with foods from different U.S. regions and guests bringing dishes to represent the host culture. I will also organize an intercultural event around an American holiday like Thanksgiving to highlight how adaptations and influences between cultures led to traditions like this. Seeking opportunities for cultural exchange, I will join local student organization events and use my language skills to make local friends. I hope to gain insight into daily life, values, and challenges in my host country. As an English speaker, I will volunteer with community ESL programs so we can help each other practice language skills. My most meaningful interactions will likely come from living with a host family. I want to build connections through daily conversation over meals, joining in family activities, and sharing American cultural mainstays like films. I know there is so much wisdom around the world that America has yet to fully benefit from. By opening my heart as well as my mind abroad, I aim to return with a global perspective that sees our shared humanity above cultural differences.

As a prospective Gilman Scholar, my objective is to act as a citizen ambassador for the United States of America by embracing diversity and encouraging mutual understanding and tolerance. In order to contribute to the development of mutual understanding, I intend to learn about the beliefs and values of the community that I will be living in with a sense of humility and respect because I intend to form meaningful relationships. Through the sharing of my experiences in different countries and the uncovering of parallels and differences in the difficulties that local communities face, I will provide a new perspective to my study abroad experience. My objective is to bring attention to the distinct cultural and political circumstances that play a role in shaping solutions to the challenges that other countries are confronted with, such as colonialism, apartheid, and economic disparity. My experience as an American gives me a unique perspective on the challenges of navigating the complexities of a society that is comprised of a wide variety of cultures, traditions, and beliefs. The process of assimilation into American culture can make it challenging for non-native Americans to keep a strong connection to their cultural background and identity. This can result in feelings of displacement and cultural alienation for the non-native American community. Having said that, my multicultural perspective has instilled in me the importance of appreciating the gift of knowledge and
