

Vibrations from blasting

Parameters which affect vibration characteristics

- In practically the same ones which influence the results of the blasts.
- The surrounding geology and rock mechanics
 - In homogenous and massive rock masses the vibrations are propagated in all directions, but not in complex geological structures.
- Thickness of soil overlaying rock.
 - Magnitude of the vibrations decrease rapidly with distance increase if soil overburden is present.
 - Large energy is used up in overcoming friction between particles and in displacing them.

Blast Vibration Studies in Surface Mines, Blasting is very important process for mining operation and a lot of explosive is used for this purpose The blasting process and usage of explosives however remain a potential source of numerous human and environmental hazards Various studies indicate that fragmentation accounts for only 20 30% of the total amount of explosive energy used Rest of the energy is lost in the form of ground vibration fly rock air overpressure and noise The specific problem associated with ground vibrations represents the human response to them Blasting vibrations may also cause a significant damage to nearby buildings or various structures In this project blast vibration study is done and it is interpreted for its effects in reference to the standards set by DGMS The study has been done with the help of geophones and Blastmate8 0 software First of all the blasting operations were monitored through geophones at distances of 100m 200m and 300m The data obtained from the instrument were interpreted by Blastmate software and the graphical output was obtained from it The Peak Particle Velocity PPV maximum charge per delay air over pressure was recorded for each blast After that the various observations were compared with the standards to determine the conclusion From the analysis of blasts vibration at the mines it was determined that the vibration level was less than 5 mm sec for the blasts when recommended amount of charge per delay or safe charge per delay was used The air overpressure value determined was in between 114 127 6 dB L The results determined from the project indicates that the peak particle velocity air overpressure generated due to blasting were within the limits The safe charge per delay for the blasting operation was determined from the study
