the Unknown, Perfecting the Natural Andrew Graciano,2008 Throughout history both art and science have been employed to visualise things unseen and to image imagine things unknown as part of the quest to understand nature In light of this perhaps our contemporary tendency to see art and science as completely divergent mutually exclusive fields of study with similarly distinct methodologies may be profitably re examined This volume brings together recent work by both junior and senior scholars treating the art science connection in eighteenth and nineteenth century art The essays are individual case studies dealing with historical interconnections between drawing painting sculpture and book illustration and such diverse fields of science as botany physics geology and evolutionary biology As a whole the book invites readers to question more generally What is art s relationship to science and vice versa At what points do the two disciplines intersect and or complement one another Can science directly inform artistic subjects Is art a useful tool to focus a scientific lens on the past to validate or challenge scientific theory to inspire and encourage scientific inquiry Can it be employed successfully as a means to visualise scientific ends Do artists have the potential to create images and objects whose meanings surpass the laws of science and outlast its theories whose functions are similarly universal and arguably more immediately accessible legible to the public If art like text and data charts has the power to create organise and disseminate information knowledge then why do we continue to privilege scientific research over artistic investigation Would it not be more fruitful and humane to see them as more equitable modes of inquiry
