Willingham,1983 Reader's Adviser and Bookman's Manual ,1925 The Reader's Adviser ,1986 The Reader ,1904 Cather, Canon, and the Politics of Reading Deborah Carlin,1992 What makes Willa Cather such an anomaly in American literature and why are her late fictions so rarely read in high school and university classrooms What is it exactly that renders them unclassifiable in the prevailing critical assessments of Cather's work Why in other works are these writings so difficult to interpret Deborah Carlin addresses these and other questions by examining the ways in which certain reading communities have placed or more often ignored Cather's complex and unsettling post 1925 fiction within canonical formulations Employing interpretive strategies drawn from narratology feminism and deconstruction Carlin focuses on five female centered late fictions My Mortal Enemy 1926 Shadows on the Rock 1931 Old Mrs Harris in Obscure Destinies 1932 1935 and Sapphira and the Slave Girl 1940 She argues that Cather's later works have been largely overlooked for two reasons they confound reader expectations by revising conventional fictional forms and they raise troubling questions about race class sexuality and power especially with regard to women What makes Carlin s work distinctive besides its focus on Cather s most problematic writings is its theoretical approach to issues of narrative and gender Rather than chart Cather s intellectual biography through the texts as others have done Carlin shows how the late fictions reflect self conscious experimentation with narrative form and at the same time reveal ambiguous sometimes contradictory feminist impulses
