What is epilepsy?

Epilepsy is a long-term condition characterized by recurrent, unprovoked seizures. These are abnormal electrical discharges in the brain that cause changes in behavior, feelings, or consciousness. The seizures can last from a few seconds to several minutes. The condition is caused by a variety of factors, including genetic factors, brain injury, and infections.

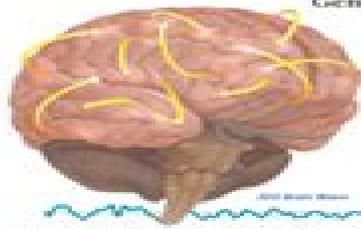

What is an epileptic seizure?

An epileptic seizure is a sudden, unprovoked burst of electrical activity in the brain. This activity causes changes in behavior, feelings, or consciousness. The seizures can last from a few seconds to several minutes. The condition is caused by a variety of factors, including genetic factors, brain injury, and infections.

Partial seizures are divided into simple partial and complex partial. Simple partial seizures involve only one part of the brain and usually last for a few seconds. Complex partial seizures involve more than one part of the brain and usually last for a few minutes. Generalized seizures involve both sides of the brain and usually last for a few minutes.

Generalized seizures

These are the most common type of epileptic seizure. They involve both sides of the brain and usually last for a few minutes. They can be further divided into tonic-clonic, absence, and myoclonic. Tonic-clonic seizures are characterized by a period of unconsciousness, followed by a period of muscle spasms. Absence seizures are characterized by a brief period of unconsciousness. Myoclonic seizures are characterized by a brief period of muscle spasms.

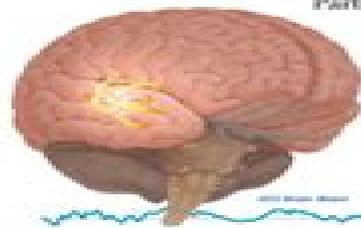

Brain - tonic seizure (Generalized)

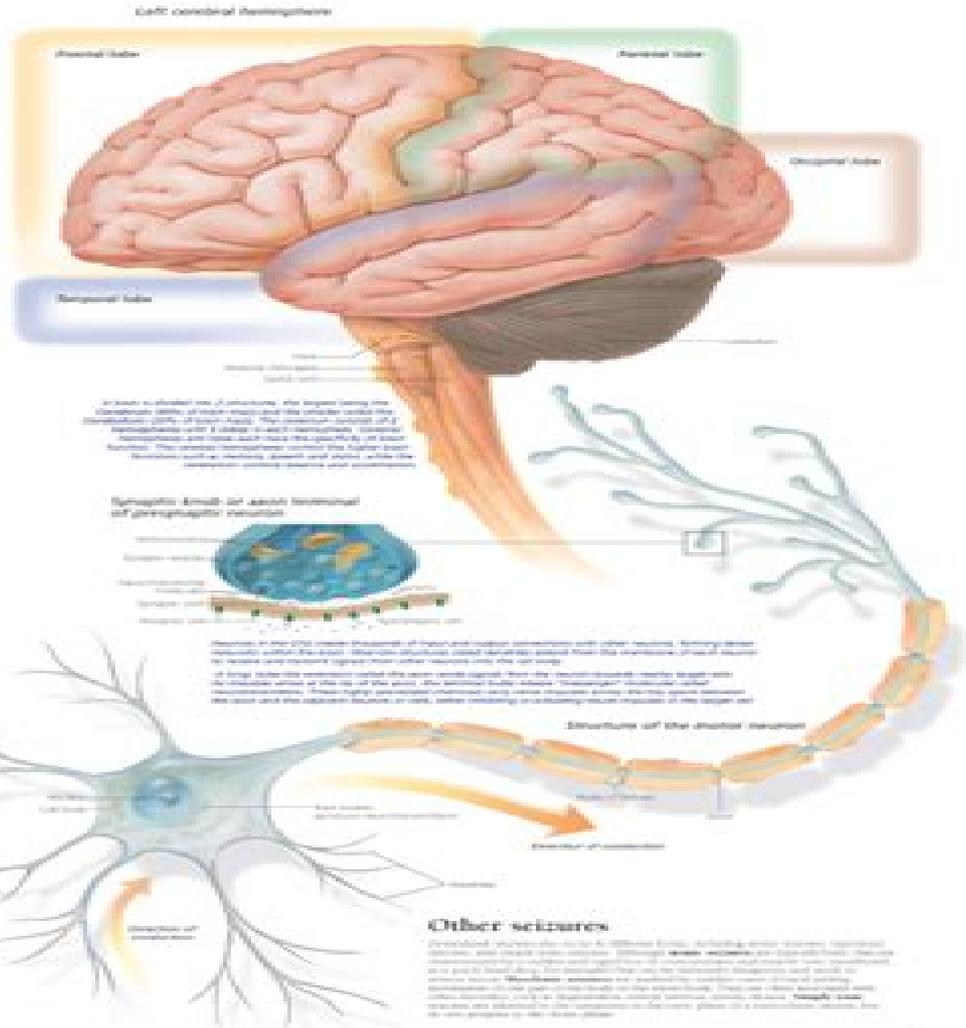

Partial (focal) seizures

These seizures involve only one part of the brain. They can be further divided into simple partial and complex partial. Simple partial seizures involve only one part of the brain and usually last for a few seconds. Complex partial seizures involve more than one part of the brain and usually last for a few minutes.

Brain - complex partial seizure

Diagnosing and treating epilepsy

The diagnosis of epilepsy is based on a detailed history of the patient's seizures, a physical examination, and an EEG. The EEG is a test that measures the electrical activity of the brain. It can help to identify the type of seizure and the location of the abnormal activity. Treatment of epilepsy is usually with anti-epileptic drugs (AEDs). These drugs help to prevent seizures by stabilizing the electrical activity of the brain.

Managing your epilepsy

It is important to take your AEDs as prescribed. Do not stop taking them without your doctor's advice. You should also avoid alcohol and recreational drugs. You should also avoid driving until you have been seizure-free for a certain period of time. You should also avoid swimming alone and climbing ladders. You should also avoid heights and machinery.
