Understanding Crime Travis Hirschi, Michael Gottfredson, 1980-10 The multiple factor approach is a departure from criminological traditions established by Sutherland It studies correlates of crime as individual qualities to determine the risks of different categories of persons The factors reevaluated in the first two essays are long discredited ones that link family stability and religious upbringing to the reduced likelihood of criminal behavior The first study shows that children from broken homes are more likely to commit a variety of delinquent acts under a variety of conditions The paper on religion cites data on cities where higher church membership correlates with lower crime rates and concludes that religion does play a central role in sustaining the moral order The third paper considers the relationship between crime and the concept of defensible space in environmental design Another study reports the systematic observation of delinquent children interacting with their parents and ascribes an active role to children in their own socialization showing how antisocial children train parents and teachers to cease making demands Papers in the second part of this volume use conceptual schemes derived from disciplines outside sociology A study of family violence develops the thesis that the ultimate origins and current distribution of child abuse may be found in a single principle of evolutionary biology A paper examining behavior patterns of aggression attachment and violence questions Sutherland's subculture of violence theses by showing how pursuits of basic sociability can result in violent behavior contrary to the values of the group Papers on juvenile delinquency and group home treatment represent approaches using a combination of psychological learning principles and differential association NCJRS modified

Understanding Crime Incidence Statistics Albert D. Biderman, James P. Lynch, 2012-12-06 The prominence achieved by the novel measure of households touched by crime when it was introduced into the National Crime Survey NCS in 1981 was responsible for renewed attention to comparisons between the crime rates reported by the NCS and the Uniform Crime Reports UCR The new NCS measure suggested that crime was declining this at a time of widespread awareness that the UCR Index was at all time highs Comparisons of the NCS and UCR in The New York Times 1981 and the Washington Post 1981 had the unfortunate consequence of reviving old and usually ill informed arguments about which is the better measure of trends in crime More recent discrepant changes of the two measures in 1986 and 1987 rekindled the debate although with somewhat diminished stridency The efforts of criminological statisticians to develop an appreciation for the two statistical systems as quite different but complementary measures have suffered a setback in these debates but an opportunity is also afforded to improve the understanding of crime statistics by officials the media and the public The need remains for the Bureau of Justice Statistics BJS the Federal Bureau of Investigation FBI and the research community to explain in quantitative terms the ways in which the two systems attend to different albeit overlapping aspects of the crime problem
